The correspondence between the Mayor of New-Orleans and Flag-officer Farragut:

FARRAGUT'S DEMAND FOR THE SURRENDER OF NEW-ORLEANS.

FLAG-SHIP PENSACOLA, OFF NEW-ORLEANS, April 25, 1862.

To His Excellency the Mayor of the City of New-Orleans:

Upon my arrival before your city I had the honor to send to your Honor Capt. RANEY, U. S. N., second in command of the expedition, to demand of you the surrender of New-Orleans to me, as the representative of the Government of the United States. Capt. RANEY reported the result of an interview with yourself and the military authorities.

It must occur to your Honor that it is not within the province of a naval officer to assume the duties of a military commandant. I came here to reduce New-Orleans to obedience to the laws of, and to vindicate the offended majesty of, the Government of the United States. The rights of persons and property shall be secured. I therefore demand of you, as its representative, the unqualified surrender of the city, and that the emblem of the sovereignty of the United States be hoisted over the City Hall, Mint and Custom-house by Meridian, this day, and all flags and other emblems of sovereignty other than that of the United States be removed from all the public buildings by that hour.

I peremptorily request that you shall exercise your authority to quell disturbance, restore order, and call upon all the good people of New-Orleans to return at once to their vocations; and I particularly demand that no person shall be molested in person or property for sentiments of loyalty to their Government.

I shall speedily and severely punish any person or persons who shall commit such outrages as were witnessed yesterday, by armed men firing upon helpless women and children for giving expression to their pleasure at witnessing the "old flag." I am, very respectfully,

D. G. FARRAGUT, Flag-Officer,
Western Gulf Squadron.

THE REPLY OF THE MAYOR.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, CITY OF NEW-ORLEANS, CITY HALL, April 26, 1862.

Flag-Officer D. G. Farragut, United States Flagship Hartford:

SIR: In pursuance of a resolution which we thought proper to take, out of regard for the lives of the women and children, who still crowd the metropolis, Gen. LOVELL has evacuated it with his troops, and retreated back to me the administration of its government and the custody of its honor. I have, in council with the City Fathers, considered the demand you make on me yesterday of an unconditional surrender of the city, coupled with a requisition to hoist the flag of the United States on the public edifices, and haul down the flag that still floats upon the breeze from the dome of this hall.

I believed my duty to transmit to you an answer, which is the universal sentiment of my constituents, as it is that and the solemn conviction. The city is without the means of defence, and is utterly destitute of the force and material that might enable it to resist an overwhelming armament, displayed in sight of it.

You are a military man, and possess an authority [illegible] concerning the municipal laws of the City of New-Orleans. It would be presumptuous in me to attempt, in this an essay to the field, if I had [illegible] and I know still less how the surrender of an undefended place, held, as this is, at the mercy of your guns and your mortars.

To surrender such a place were an idle and unnecessary ceremony. The city is yours by the power of arms, and by my choice or the consent of my fellow-citizens. It is for you to determine what will be the fate that awaits them. As to holding any flag but that of our own adoption and allegiance, let me say to you that the man lives not in our midst, whose head and heart would not be paralyzed at the mere thought of such a subject; nor could I find in my fellow-citizens an desperate and wretched a renegade as would venture to propose with his hand the sacred emblem of our aspirations.

We may have manifested sentiments which would not have been engaged in a better cause than that to which you have devoted your sword, and doubtless not [illegible] generous nature, but I know how to appreciate the emotions which [illegible] them. You have a gallant people to admire [illegible] during your occupancy of this city—a people [illegible] to all that can, in the least, affect their dignity and honor. The obligations which I shall [illegible] to religiously complied with. You may trust their honor, though you might not count on their submission to unmerited wrong.

In conclusion, I beg you to understand that the people of New-Orleans, while unable to resist your force, do not allow themselves to be insulted by the interference of such as have rendered themselves odious and contemptible by their dastardly desertion of our cause in the mighty struggle in which we are engaged, or such as might remind them too forcibly that they are the conquered and you the conquerors. Peace and order may be preserved without resort to measures which I could not at this moment prevent. Your occupying the city does not transfer allegiance from the Government of their choice to one which they have deliberately repudiated, and that they yield the obedience which the conqueror is entitled to exert from the conquered. Respectfully,

JOHN F. MONROE, Mayor.

THE SURRENDER OF FORT MACON.

The following dispatch is also taken from the Richmond Enquirer:

WILMINGTON, Wednesday, April 29.

Fort Macon surrendered conditionally on Sunday last. A portion of the garrison arrived here at 12 o'clock last night. It is reported that Col. WARE saved all the public papers. The officers were allowed to take their side arms. Seven of our men are reported killed, and a number wounded.

SECOND DISPATCH.

WILMINGTON, Tuesday, April 29.

Fort Macon surrendered on Friday, 25th inst., after a bombardment ten and a half hours. The batteries were planted behind heavy sand banks. The breaching battery was 1,100 distant, and the mortars 1,400 feet, and entirely concealed from the fort. The garrison were allowed the honors of war. The officers retained their side-arms and all parolled. Seven men were killed and eighteen wounded, two mortally. The enemy's loss is not known.

Col. WARE and one hundred and fifty-five men arrived off the Bar yesterday afternoon on board the Federal gunboat Chippewa, and were transferred to a river steamer under a flag of truce, and reached here as stated in the first dispatch. The others were sent up the Sound from the fort.

DISPATCH FROM GEN. WOOL.

FORTRESS MONROE, Thursday, May 1.

Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

I have just received a dispatch from Brig.-Gen. MANSFIELD, to the effect that five negroes have arrived from Portsmouth. The contrabands report that Fort Macon was taken on Friday last. Eighteen rebels were killed and twenty-seven wounded.

Gen. Beauregard has evacuated Corinth and fallen back on Memphis.

It is reported that Commodore TATTNALL and the principal officers of the Merrimac have resigned. The Merrimac lies off the Marine Hospital at Craney Island, fast to the buoy. She now mounts twelve guns. There are no other steamers there.

THE FALL OF NEW-ORLEANS.

From the Petersburgh (Va.) Express, April 28.

We are at last authoritatively informed that this large and flourishing commercial emporium of the South has fallen into the hands of Yankee vandals, who, by means of gunboats and bay boats, accomplish on water what they never can do by land. We have thus far received very brief particulars; but they are enough to satisfy us that the city has been evacuated by our troops, and is now in possession of the enemy.

The gunboats succeeded in passing the forts, distant some sixty miles below New-Orleans, at an early hour Thursday morning, before or just about day dawn. We hear that they were completely enveloped in bales of hay, the bales being first saturated with water, and thus proving an effectual barrier to both hot and solid shot. The garrisons at the forts fought gallantly for a week or more, but the vessels of the enemy were so numerous, and his men so persistent, ingenious and determined, that his passage could not longer be successfully opposed.

As soon as it was ascertained that the boats had passed the forts, the excitement in the city naturally became intense, but we are pleased to her that Gen. LOVELL, who was in command, possessed complete control over his troops, and caused all his orders to be promptly executed.

All the Government stores were removed, as was also the ammunition. What little cotton and sugar remained were destroyed—the former by application of the torch, and the latter by the waters of the Mississippi. All the bullion in the banks was secured, and on Friday night, Gen. LOVELL, at the head of his army, marched out, carrying all the small arms.

With the enemy's gunboats lying directly in range, the defence of New-Orleans was, of course, out of the question. Such batteries as had been erected were constructed with reference to the approach of the enemy by another route, the forts already named being relied upon to stop the progress of the enemy by the river. In regard to the iron-sided steamers about which we have heard so much, and which were so confidently relied upon to destroy the piratical craft of the enemy, should they succeed in passing the forts, we have many rumors, but nothing entirely reliable. It is said that the Mississippi was on the stocks, in an unfinished condition. She had not been launched, nor had any attempt been made to launch her. We have good reason to believe that she was entirely destroyed before our troops left.

The Louisiana, mounting 22 guns, is said to have been sunk by the heavy, steel-pointed conical shots of the enemy's guns. It is also stated that she proved too heavy to be easily managed. Her sides were perpendicular—not angular, like the Virginia—and, therefore, far less capable of resisting the terrible fire of the enemy. As to the Lady Pole, the Manassas, and other iron-clads which have been at New-Orleans, we know nothing. Rumor assigns them a position near Fort Pillow, where, of course, they could not have rendered any service in the defence of New-Orleans.

It is useless to disguise the fact that the fall of New-Orleans is a severe blow, but we do not consider it at all irreparable, as some faint-hearted croakers would endeavor to make us believe. It is an utter impossibility to defend any city after the enemy has reached it with his formidable gunboats. Our battles with the enemy have to be fought in the interior, where we have always whipped him, and where, by the help of Gd, we hope to continue to thrash him. East of the Mississippi we have a country larger than any upon the European continent, save Russia, and here we can never be subdued. But it will not do for any energy to be now relaxed, or for any man who is capable of bearing arms to stay at home. All must lend a helping hand, and a bold, decisive stroke, may push the war into the enemy's country, and cause him to leave quickly every foot of Southern territory he now holds. In this way, and this only, can the war be now speedily brought to a close.

FORT MACON, N. C., CAPTURED BY GEN. BURNSIDE.

The Location of the Fort, its Relation to Beaufort, and the Topography of the Adjoining Coast.

FORT MACON, NORTH CAROLINA.

Fort Macon, North Carolina, the capture of which by Gen. BURNSIDE, is announced, commands the entrance to the harbor of Beaufort, North Carolina, and its guns have a full sweep over the main channel. It is the strongest regular fortification on the Atlantic coast between Fortress Monroe and Fort Sumter. As Beaufort was the only entrance to the North Carolina Sounds below Ocracoke Inlet, it really was a main mean of defence for the whole coast of North Carolina. From Beaufort, also, a railroad ran to Newbern and to Raleigh, the Capital of the State, and this road at Goldsborough intersected the main line running south from Virginia. As a defence to North Carolina against approaches from any direction, there was no work so important as Fort Macon, and no harbor so valuable as Beaufort. But the place was rendered practically valueless when Gen. BURNSIDE had seized Newbern, which cut it off from communication with the interior. We give herewith a view of the minute topography of the harbor and regions around Beaufort, by which its relations to Fort Macon and the adjoining sea islands and coast will be seen.

Fort Macon is a regular casemated United States fort, situated on a bluff on Bogue's Bank, a mile and three-quarters from Beaufort; opposite is Shackleford Banks, a mile and a half across.

It is located at a point which gave it complete command of the Bulkhead Channel and the approaches to the city. It was an old work, but substantial, and kept in good repairs. The garrison was said to number some five hundred men (which constitutes a full garrison), and was in command of one Col. WARE, whom the rebels accuse of being a drunkard and suspect of being a traitor to their treasonable cause. Fort MACON is hexagonal in form, with two tiers of guns—one in casemated bomb-proof, and the other en barbette. Its armament is said to consist of twenty 32-pounders, thirty 24-pounders, three field pieces, for flanking defence, and thirty-five howitzers and mortars of varying calibre. Before it was seized by the rebels, it mounted one tier of old-fashioned sea-coast guns, 32 and 42-pounders. It was at that time in charge of a guard of only a few men. The rebels strengthened it against assaults by sea, little anticipating that the fort would ever be approached in the way it has been by Gen. BURNSIDE. Fort Macon cost the Government in its construction $400,000, and the value of the armament is $200,000. The masonry and freework were much out of repair when the fort was seized by the rebels, which was on the 21 of January of last year, by order of Gov. ELLIS. The fort was originally named after "the last of the Romans," the Hon. NATHANIEL MACON, of North Carolina.

Beaufort Harbor is the best harbor in the State of North Carolina, having accommodations for vessels with fifteen feet of water, and is accessible not only from the ocean, but by steamboats from Albemarle Sound, along the channel marked in the diagram as Middle Channel. It was in this harbor that the pirate steamer Nashville took refuge from our pursuing gunboats some time ago, and from here it again escaped. Beaufort is the capital town of Carteret County, has about 2,500 inhabitants, and has been a place of considerable commerce, chiefly in turpentine and resin. It lies at the mouth of the Newport River, a few miles from the sea, and a railroad, which has its southboard terminus at Shepherd's Point, opposite, connects it with the interior. It will be remembered that it was reported in March, when Gen. BURNSIDE proposed to move down upon Beaufort, that the rebels had blown up Fort Macon. But that proved to be a mistake. It has been for some time entirely cut off by land and water, and its fall was inevitable.

FROM GEN. HALLECK'S ARMY.

An Important Reconnoissance to Purdy.

Destruction of the Bridges on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

Dispersion of a Force of Rebel Cavalry.

CAIRO, Thursday, May 1.

The river has risen two inches in the last 24 hours.

The steamer Belle Creole has arrived from Pittsburgh Landing. Her dates are to Wednesday noon.

A reconnoissance in force was made yesterday morning, from the right wing, four miles this side of Purdy on the Memphis and Ohio Road. They met a force of rebel cavalry, who fled in great haste and could not be rallied. They were pursued to Purdy.

Our forces, on taking possession of the town, burned two bridges and run a locomotive into the river. Three prisoners were taken. Our forces then retired, having cut off all railroad communication with the country north of Corinth, which has been a great source of rebel supplies.

PITTSBURGH LANDING, Thursday, May 1.

Gen. HALLECK telegraphs Secretary STANTON that official information has been received of the defeat and rout of 600 savages, under Cols. COFFEE and STANWAITE, at Neosho, Mo., by 150 of the First Missouri Volunteers. 62 prisoners, 70 horses, and a large quantity of arms were taken.

The body of Gov. HARVEY, of Wisconsin, recently drowned at Savanna, has been found, forty miles below, on the bank.

The weather is clear and pleasant, with a good prospect for improvement in the roads. The river is falling.

Gen. T. W. SHERMAN has arrived from Port Royal, and taken his brigade.

ANOTHER MOVEMENT BY GEN. MITCHEL.

A Successful Dash Against the Enemy at Bridgeport, Alabama.

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., via LAWRENCE, Thursday May 1.

To Hon. Edwin Stanton, Secretary of War:

On yesterday, the enemy having cut our wires and attacked, during the night, one of our brigades, I deemed it my duty to head, in person, the expedition against Bridgeport. I started by a train of cars in the morning, followed by two additional regiments of infantry and two companies of cavalry. I found that our pickets had engaged the enemy's pickets four miles from Bridgeport, and after a sharp engagement, in which we lost one man killed, drove them across a stream, whose railway bridge I had burned. With four regiments of infantry, two pieces of artillery, dragged by hand, and two companies of cavalry, we advanced to the burnt bridge and opened our fire upon the enemy's pickets on the other side, thus producing the impression that our advance would be by the railway. This accomplished, the entire force was thrown across the country about a mile and put on the road leading from Stevenson to Bridgeport. The middle column now advanced at a very rapid pace. Our scouts attacked those of the enemy and forced them from the Bridgeport road. We thus succeeded in making a complete surprise, immediately forming our line of battle on the crest of a wooded hill within five hundred yards of the works constructed to defend the bridge. At our first fire the rebels broke and ran. They attempted to blow up the main bridge but failed. They then attempted to fire the further extremity, but the volunteers, at my call, pushed forward in the face of their fire, and saved the bridge. From the island to the main shore we could not save it. It is of small moment, its length being but about 400 feet.

Prisoners taken report five regiments of infantry and 1,500 cavalry stationed at the bridge. This campaign is ended, and I now occupy Huntsville in perfect security; while in all of Alabama north of the Tennessee River floats no flag but that of the Union.

THE SIEGE OF YORKTOWN.

The Preparations for the Grand Climax Nearly Completed.

The Defeat of the Rebels a Foregone Conclusion.

Probable Capture of the Whole Rebel Force.

Editorial Correspondence of the New-York Times.

CAMP BEYOND YORKTOWN, Tuesday Night, April 29, 1862.

All the preparations for the grand climax approach completion. To-day, for the first time, the rebels seem to have become aware of the gradual approaches our army is making toward their position, and at intervals during both morning and afternoon they have been vigorously shelling, or trying to shell, the men who were at work in the advanced trench, which runs along within a thousand yards of their line of forts. It was only three nights ago since the first earth was thrown up, and before dawn our men had made a very comfortable shelter for themselves from the storm of shell and shot that greeted the revelation of the work to rebel eyes. This trench runs from York River directly across an open field to the woods. Behind it—perhaps a hundred rods—stands the old mansion in which it is said WASHINGTON and CORNWALLIS signed the treaty of surrender. There is a large lawn in front, a fine peach-orchard now in full blossom in the rear, and to the right the view extends over the York River and Gloucester Point.

Last night a body of regulars quietly ran a zig-zag from this first parallel some sixty or seventy yards nearer the advance, in spite of heavy firing which the rebels opened upon them. This morning, at about 10 o'clock, the rebels opened with great vigor, and for over an hour kept up a very severe fire of heavy shells, most of them going beyond the trenches, striking and bursting in the open field beyond. I had, from the top of a very high tree on a conspicuous point, a splendid view of the whole performance, and could see distinctly the discharge of the guns and the bursting of the shells. Our men kept quietly at work, and not one who remained in the trenches was hurt. Three who strayed into the open field were killed. One was named GUERNSEY, and belonged to the Forty-Fourth New-York Volunteers; the names of the others I did not learn.

An hour after the firing ceased I rode with Gen. BUTTERFIELD and half-a-dozen others to the end of the work, and then dismounting, walked along the trenches, and visited the house already referred to. One tremendous shell had struck the ground, bounded and passed through the foundation into the cellar, and then upward, through the floor, where it burst, shattering the whole establishment by its explosion. Returning toward the trenches, we had, at a point projecting into the river, and partially shaded with trees, a capital view of a sand-bag battery, around which ten or fifteen rebels were standing, apparently watching the progress of our work, but doing nothing to interrupt it. They apparently discovered us after a time, and began to train a field piece upon our position—but we disappointed them by retiring into the friendly protection of the trenches.

I have spent now two days in exploring the entire front of our position. I have no disposition to report what I have seen, for it could not be done without giving information of the greatest importance to the enemy, though I do not believe it would tend to increase their confidence in their ability to withstand an advance. Two things I think I can predict with perfect safety—first, that Gen. MCCLELLAN will not commence the attack until he is completely ready; and second, that within twelve hours from the time he does commence it, he will have taken Yorktown with all its guns, and made all its garrison prisoners. And I venture further to say that this will have been done with a smaller loss of life than has ever attended a similar battle of equal importance in this country. There are some persons, I know, who will sneer at this result, and say that saving life is not the object and of war. Other things being equal, I think it is. I am quite certain that the million of people scattered throughout the North, who have relatives and friends in the field, will not consider those laurels dim which are not most deeply dyed in blood.

There are some who think that Gen. MCCLELLAN, on first arriving here, might have carried Yorktown by a sudden dash, and saved the labor, cost and delay of a regular siege. If he had been allowed to carry out his original plan he would have turned Yorktown, and been in Richmond now. But, when he was suddenly deprived of the very man he had relied on to accomplish this, he had no choice but to change his plan. He then was compelled to take Yorktown by a direct advance, and that advance was a work of the utmost difficulty. Gen. WOOL, it is true, made haste to telegraph to Washington that there were no works, and very few men to defend the place; but Gen. WOOL, I apprehend, has changed his opinion now. If not, no one, certainly, shares it. The most cursory survey shows that Yorktown is very strongly defended, that the rebels have very formidable intrenchments stretching across the approachable part of the peninsula, that they have an immense number of very heavy guns, with mortars, rifled cannon and columbiads, and that they have a force of not far from 100,000 men in possession. If any one supposes such a force as this is to be readily or easily overcome, I advise him to come and try it. Besides all this, Gloucester Point, directly opposite, and within easy range, is strongly held, and there between the two shall be opposed the approach of our gunboats. I have [illegible] the possession of Yorktown will be very sharply contested, and if it is not the bloodiest fight of the campaign, it will be because Gen. MCCLELLAN's calculations have been [illegible] to be [illegible] formidable. If, however, the [illegible] is a deeper one-deeper, they can [illegible] The army is in splendid fighting order, and has not the slightest thought, under any circumstances, of turning back.

WASHINGTON, April 30.

Everything has been quiet during the night. The rebels fired some shells, but did little damage. A detachment of our troops was sent into the [illegible] in advance of our first parallel, to drive some rebel sharpshooters who have annoyed the pickets. It did it without difficulty or loss. While I say it to-day, I think the rebels will wake up some morning and find another parallel carried some five hundred feet before their guns. Why they permit our works thus to be carried on under their noses, with scarcely an attempt at interruption, excites a good deal of conjecture and speculation. It certainly is something very unusual. While the Allies were carrying their approaches toward Sebastopol, sorties in great force took place nightly, and were often attended with very heavy loss. Indeed, usually in a siege, the heaviest of the fighting takes place in the trenches; when they are completed, the work is nearly done.

Many infer from the quiet of the rebels that they do not mean really to contest the place, but that as soon as the assault commences they will withdraw. I confess I cannot help thinking so myself. But they certainly will not, unless the attack is formidable enough to make resistance hopeless. If Gen. MCCLELLAN had McDOWELL's corps to cooperate with him, he could cut off their retreat, and compel the surrender of the whole force. Whether this can be done now or not remains to be seen. Even if the rebels get away themselves, it is not believed they can remove their artillery.

It seems pretty evident that Col. GRETTON and Capt. CASSIDY, of New-York, deliberately deserted. The conclusion is a painful one, but in view of all the circumstances, I see no way to avoid it. They had not been in camp long enough to have much information of importance to give the enemy.

I do not think active operations will commence before the first of next week. H. J. R.

The Slander upon Gen. Smith—Its Groundlessness—Letter from Gen. Keyes, etc.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

CAMP BEYOND YORKTOWN, Monday, April 28, 1862.

I reached here last evening, after a very heavy ride of 22 miles, on horseback, from Fortress Monroe. The roads are perfectly execrable, the army seems encamped in a series of mud-holes, but every man is in the best possible spirits. I go to Gen. McCLELLAN's headquarters this morning, and can only write at this moment a few lines upon a single subject.

A Court of Inquiry meets here to-day, at the request of Gen. W. F. SMITH, to investigate the charge brought against him in Congress by Mr. FOLLAMSBEE, of Vermont, that he was intoxicated, and therefore threw from his horse during the engagement of the Vermont troops a few days since. I find the feeling pervading the army on this subject to be one of intense indignation. From the investigation I have made into the subject, (and I have conversed with a great many officers upon it,) I have not the slightest doubt that the whole story is a most wanton and outrageous slander. With whom it had its origin, or what was the motive for starting it, time may show—and it is not worth while now, therefore, to dwell upon this point. It seems, however, to have been only one feature of a systematic attempt to destroy the character of one of the most gallant and meritorious officers in the service; and if it should prove to be part and parcel of the machinery by which certain malcontents in Congress and elsewhere have sought to obtain complete control of the Army of the Potomac for political purposes, there would be less room for surprise than indignation.

The proceedings of the Court of Inquiry will show conclusively, I think, that there was no man on the ground that day more completely in possession of all his faculties, or more entirely free from the appearance or suspicion of intoxication, than Gen. SMITH. His first fall occurred while he was riding at full speed across an open field, which seemed to be perfectly smooth and safe. He came to what appeared to be a bare surface of hard sand. The moment his horse's fore-feet struck it, they sunk in above his knees; the horse fell, and the General was pitched over his head. He got up, remounted, and had planted Capt. AMES' Battery in a position to command the enemy's guns, which had been blazing away upon him. He was a little to the rear of the battery, and, upon the second discharge of the guns, his horse reared, the middle-girth broke, and he fell over backward. The General then took the horse of Capt. WEST, of the Coast Survey, who was one of his Aids, nearest him at the moment, mounting him without aid, and completing his duties without further difficulty. This is the whole story, out of which this most damaging and outrageous charge has been manufactured.

Gen. MCCLELLAN, on first seeing the report of the slander, wrote to President LINCOLN a very strong letter, pronouncing it utterly false, from his own personal observation, and characterizing it as only one of the many infamous attempts now made to destroy the characters of men who are gallantly serving their country in the face of the enemy. Capt. AMES, Col. DAVISON, and other officers, to whom I have spoken, of Gen. SMITH's staff, who were with him at the time, have written letters equally explicit on the subject, and will give testimony before the Court. The officers of the whole Vermont Brigade held a meeting as soon as Mr. MCKEEN's remarks reached them, and denounced the whole story as utterly false and slanderous.

The following letter from Gen. KEYES is a specimen of them all:

HEADQUARTERS ——, ARMY CORPS, April 26, 1862.

Brig.-Gen. W. F. Smith, Commanding Division:

The rebels in the newspapers have made much on the 16th inst., charging you with gross neglect of duty, and the enemy at the "Dam Battery" [illegible] in my opinion, utterly groundless. I have [illegible] in conversation with you and Gen. [illegible] headquarters, till within forty-five minutes of the time when the companies of the Vermont regiment crossed the water and entered the enemy's works. At the time I took leave, you were not at all excited by drink. I speak positively because I have long known you intimately. You are at liberty to publish this note. I remain, very truly, yours,

E. D. KEYES,
Brig.-Gen., Com. —— Army Corps.

The other letters referred to are quite as explicit and direct in their contradiction of this report as the above. There can be no doubt at all in the mind of any one who has made investigation that may be had into the subject, but that Gen. SMITH has been most grossly slandered. I have good reason to believe that Mr. FOLLAMSBEE himself has had submitted to him very full evidence of the entire groundlessness of the story for which he has made himself responsible. It is extremely probable in his candor that he should have shown no great disposition to do justice to a General commanding the troops of his own State than he has done for others. Indeed, there are not a few members of Congress who show an entire willingness to sacrifice the reputations of the army by damaging the characters of individual officers, if they can thereby promote their personal or political objects they have in view.

I have no news of any importance to communicate. There is a constant desultory firing kept up along the front, especially on the left wing—but nothing very important is likely to happen of one.

NEWS FROM THE SOUTH.

PROSPECTS OF PEACE AND WAR.

A Sweeping Conscription Law in Force.

Aspect of Affairs Generally—Notes and Items from Rebel Journals.

By way of Fortress Monroe, through fugitive slaves, we have received Richmond and Norfolk papers as late as April 25 and 26 respectively, which furnish us the following interesting extracts:

WHEN WILL THE WAR END?

[From the Richmond Enquirer, April 25.]

The question is asked at every lull in the storm—the thunderbolt all like for the war to cease, that peace may be restored again. But it is only when our independence is acknowledged that our liberties secured. With whatever [illegible] God shall give us, we will wage battle till these objectives be therefore, with our enemies. They [illegible] wicked attack; when we have made them weary of it, the war will end—not before. They can stop—we cannot.

Our enemies have waded so deeply into this war that they will not now give up while a hope of our subjugation remains. They are impelled not only by that insane hatred that love of regulating the lives and morals of other people, and that rapacity which covets the South as a victim, in which this hatred and this war originated; but the shame of defeat in the face of their many vaunings, and the enormous debt which they have created, and from the payment of which they wish to escape by throwing it on us, will combine to make them prosecute their assaults until expectation shall fail or exhaustion ensue.

At present it is not to be denied that their hopes are strong. They have made great and skillful preparations. They have achieved some successes. Their Generals and politicians have solaced the people with confident assurances of speedy and decisive triumph, and have thus allayed their impatience and sustained their spirits. The Press has through choice, or under duress, contributed to this condition of the public mind by all the resources of suppression and misrepresentation. The North is this day counting upon a speedy termination of the war.

Which should prove a damper to this confidence, and we learn by a gentleman just from the North, that they represent the second day of conflict as bringing them a victory that more than repaired the damages of the first. Utterly untrue as this is, the fact cannot long answer, for a time, its purpose of deception.

It only remains for us to press on this tremendous contest. We must fight. We must fight much and bravely. We must blast their expectations. We must break their combinations. The path to peace lies through much blood. It is a sad necessity, but the fault is not with us. Our consciences are clear. We have done everything; it is as unclean as it is unmanly. Let us rather summon our utmost resources of heart, and mind and soul. * * *

It is true that we are to win safety and peace. No man can see a peace to us. If we travel this diligently we shall soon reach the end of our journey. If we loiter, it will last us long—perhaps for weary and harassing years. As a mere question of business, then, we bestow every resource of energy, courage and means into the fight, and work out our speedy deliverance. If we can make this campaign what we wish and what we hope, it will be our last. If it suffice to convince our enemy that he cannot conquer us—that his efforts to put his debt on us are but making it larger for himself—he will hesitate, halt, forsake the war. Then we will have peace—till then we shall have no peace. Such is the work that we have before us. The war will last till this work be done. Does any man desire peace?—let him sling himself into the war.

REBEL GUERRILLA WARFARE.

In the Confederate Senate on April 18, Mr. Preston, of Virginia, from the Military Committee, reported adversely to the resolution of Mr. Burnett of Kentucky, authorizing the President to receive into service detached companies of volunteers, for guerrilla warfare, and asked to be discharged from further consideration of the same.

Mr. Burnett thought this branch of service would be invaluable to our country. The times demand them. Guerrillas are serviceable for local defence, harassing of the enemy's supplies, harassing their rear, capturing their wagons, &c., &c. There are very many men like those on the border, who could do great service, and might be thus employed.

Mr. Preston said that the reasons influencing the Committee were these: An act is about to be passed placing the whole military force of the country in the hands of the President. If the Secretary of War desires guerrillas, he can detach companies and regiments for this service; but he did not wish to form independent corps free from restraint. Difficulties had already arisen from these separate commands—for instance, the independent commands of Gen. Wise and Gen. Floyd. Difficulties will necessarily arise when commissions are appointed over officers of this character. War must be a unity, and, if there is conflict of authority, efficiency is at an end. If these men are received, and they are allowed privileges over the rest of the army, the service will be injured. He [illegible] the usefulness of guerrilla bands—but [illegible] mold and if they were put in the field irregularly and without proper restraint.

Mr. Burnett said he did not design to give authority to organize roving bandits—what he wanted was the employment of bold, daring men, who would be received regularly in the service, but would be detached for guerrilla warfare. He wanted them to be placed under all necessary restraints and restrictions [illegible] in order to meet that view he offered the following:

Resolved, That the resolution directing the Military Committee to inquire into the propriety of authorizing the President to receive troops for irregular or detached service be recommitted, with instructions to said Committee to report a joint resolution, authorizing the President to receive troops, under such regulations and restrictions as may be prescribed by the War Department.

Mr. Brandon read the law for receiving troops and for the organization of the army, showing that the President had already the power to accomplish all that the gentleman desired. The law covered all the points.

The resolution was agreed to, but reconsidered, and the original resolution recommitted.

CONSCRIPTION IN THE SOUTH.

[From the Richmond Enquirer, April 25.]

To the law of Congress, as published, there were subsequently passed several amendments or auxiliary laws. We present the following synopsis of the law as thus modified:

The conscription law places in the service of the Confederate States, for three years, unless the war ends before, all white men between eighteen and thirty-five years of age, resident in the Confederate States, and not legally exempt from service.

The law is silent as to exemptions; but an act declaring the classes of exempts has since been passed, which makes persons generally those hitherto exempt, with some additions.

Twelve months' men between the prescribed ages are retained in service for two years from the expiration of their present term, should the war continue so long; and all these under eighteen and over thirty-five, are to be retained for ninety days after their term expires, unless their places are sooner supplied by recruits.

The twelve months' men between eighteen and thirty-five, who are retained beyond their term of enlistment, and who have not yet received bounty and furlough, shall receive both; the furlough, however, to be granted in such numbers and at such times as the Secretary of War may deem most compatible with the public interest; and the men may receive in lieu of furlough, the commutation value in money of the compensation granted to furloughed men by the act.

The term of service of those who originally enlisted for the war, or who have since reenlisted for that period, is extended by the law.

Men now in service are not permitted to reenlist in companies other than those to which they now belong, except in the reenlistments which have been made in companies by transfer from one company to another, or into a new company, where the reenlistment has not been perfected. Companies, battalions and regiments of twelve months' men, received into service by the act, shall be mustered, within thirty days from the date of the act, on a day to be fixed by the commander of the brigade, to the end that they may elect their officers whom they have retained, previous to election.

Companies, battalions, squadrons, or regiments organized, or in process of organization, by authority of the Secretary of War, which may within thirty days from the passage of the act, have the whole number of men necessary to complete their organization actually enrolled, not including, however, in that number persons not in service, shall be mustered into the service of the Confederate States, and be received in the case of the service to which they were authorized to organize, and elect their company, battalion and regimental officers.

To enroll the persons contemplated by the act, and not enrolled, the President, by and with the consent of the Congress of the States, employ State officers; if such consent cannot be obtained, Commissioners shall be appointed by the President, who shall be received into service, who shall be enrolled, and commissioned by the Secretary of War in the different companies of the State from which such persons are enrolled, until each company is filled to its proper number.

Masters and ordinary seamen, enrolled under the act, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be transferred to the naval service.

If, after filling up the companies, regiments, battalions and squadrons from any State, there shall remain any of the enrolled men, the excess shall be kept as a reserve; and at stated intervals, not exceeding three months, detachments [illegible] from the reserve to be placed in the ranks of the regiments, battalions, etc., in the proportion of one for every twenty men in the regiment, battalion, etc., as may be practicable.

They are to be subject to the same rules and articles of war, except that if they willfully refuse to obey a call of the President, they shall be held as deserters, and punished as such.

Whenever the President shall think that the exigencies of the service require it, he may call into active service the entire reserve, or as much as may be necessary, and they shall be organized under such rules as the Secretary of War may prescribe, and shall elect their field and company officers.

The reserves from each State, when thus called out, shall be organized separately.

Every man mustered into service, who shall bring with him a musket, shot gun, rifle or carbine acceptable as an efficient weapon, shall receive the value of it as ascertained by the mustering officer under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, or if the owner be unwilling to sell, he shall receive $1 a month for the use of such arm.

Persons not liable to duty may be received as substitutes, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Vacancies shall be filled by the President from the company, battalion, squadron or regiment in which such vacancies occur, by promotion according to seniority, except in cases of disability or other incompetency.

The President may, however, fill a vacancy by promoting any officer of the company, battalion, squadron, or regiment, who may have been distinguished in the service by valor and skill, without reference to seniority. Vacancies in the lowest grade of commissioned officers of a company shall be filled by election, or the President may promote to such vacancies non-commissioned officers who have distinguished themselves by skill and valor in the service. Persons not now in service may, before being enrolled, volunteer with existing companies now in service.

THE BATTLE OF SHILOH.

The death of Gen. Gladden, of South Carolina, in consequence of a wound received in the battle of Shiloh, is announced in a dispatch to the Savannah Republican. The same telegram says that the occupation of Decatur and Huntsville was expected; that poisoned balls were found in the National camps at Shiloh, and that the force was 65,000.

The New-Orleans Picayune has a dispatch from Corinth, Mississippi, April 8, says that Gens. Bragg, Bankhead and Hindman have been appointed Major-Generals; Col. Thomas Jordan, Assistant Adjutant-General to Gen. Beauregard, has been appointed Brigadier-General, and Capt. Jack Morgan Colonel.

REBEL LOSS AT CORINTH.

From the Richmond Enquirer, April 24.

We learn from gentlemen just arrived from Corinth, that the battle of Shiloh was, considering the numbers engaged, one of the greatest and bloodiest conflicts of latter days—decidedly the most sanguinary ever fought upon this continent, if we except those of the Conquerer Cortez. Manassas and every other battle of the war pales before it.

We are positively assured that Gen. Beauregard lost between 1,500 and 1,600 men killed outright, and over seven or eight thousand wounded. The Federal loss is perhaps correctly estimated at about 15,000 killed, wounded and missing. The Yankee newspapers themselves, admit a total loss of between 10,000 and 15,000 men.

GEN. WISE AND HIS LEGION.

From the Richmond Enquirer, April 23.

Yesterday, Gen. Wise addressed the men of the Sixtieth Regiment Virginia Volunteers in a spirited and stirring speech of some minutes' duration. He states that his Legion has been greatly reduced by the hard service they had seen. Some had been transferred from his command by Secretary of War Benjamin, and others had been captured by the enemy. But he was happy to say that he was again vigorously recruiting, and that his command would be greatly increased. The Secretary of War had, he said, assured him that the gallant Third would again be placed under his command. The General paid a merited compliment to his veteran troops for their bravery and uncomplaining endurance of every hardship and toil. He concluded by declaring that he had never retreated, except upon the order of his superior officer, and, so help him God, he never would! The gallant old leader was frequently interrupted with applause, and at the end of his remarks, there deafening cheers were given for "Gen. Henry A. Wise" with great earnestness.

THE LATE FIGHT AT SOUTH MILLS, N. C.

The Norfolk Day Book states that the enemy landed a force, supposed to be from 5,000 to 6,000 strong, at Richardson's Landing, some three or four miles the other side of South Mills, on Saturday, April 19.

Col. Wright, with a portion of the Third Georgia Regiment, and Capt. McComas' company of artillery, in all about 500 men, met them at this point, while on their march, and that the artillery suddenly emerged from their concealed position when the enemy were within 400 yards of them, and opened a deadly fire upon them with grape and canister. This was supposed to be about 11 o'clock on Saturday, and from this time until 5 o'clock P. M., the battle raged, our little force repeatedly falling back, until they got behind their intrenchments, where they made a stand, and sent off for reinforcements.

It is said the resistance by our troops was of the most determined nature, and kept the enemy back much longer than it was thought possible to do, in view of his overpowering numbers.

The first and second wounded sent off from the scene of action reported great slaughter among the enemy, and that none of our forces were hurt. But later in the day the news came in that we had lost 15 killed and about 50 wounded. Among the killed we learn is Capt. McComas, of the artillery company, and Lieut. Hagan, of the Third Georgia. The bodies of the killed we learn arrived at Deep Creek on Sunday morning. Capt. McComas we learn was killed by a Minié ball entering in the vicinity of his heart.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

The Southwestern Baptist, published at Tuskegee, Ala., says: "We suppose, from the best information we have, that at least one-half of our active pastors are now in the army."

The New-Orleans Bee says: "We understand the authentic information has been received to the effect that the enemy have left Pass Christian, Biloxi, and the Gulf coast generally. If this is confirmed, the Sound will be open, and navigation between New-Orleans and Mobile will no longer be obstructed.

A correspondent of the Columbus Sun says that if those who have money to burn that have been used some time, will take the earth floor, put it in barrels, and leach it as they do ashes, then boil down the strained water, they will obtain more than enough salt to pay for the trouble. The writer knows of two instances in which the yield of one was ten sacks, and the other enough to supply a large family for a year.

A law was passed by both branches of the Legislature, says the Richmond Enquirer, prohibiting the issue of licenses to sell any kind of merchandise to any other foreign-born citizens than those who are naturalized. This is a measure long since necessary. There are numbers of the foreign-born population in active business all over the State, who, upon a call for militia, have thrown themselves upon the protection of foreign Powers represented by consuls in the Confederacy. This law, passed with so much unanimity by the Legislature, will bring these gentlemen to a realization of the truth of an old saw—"it is a bad rule that won't work both ways."

As late as April 23 and 24 the Richmond Enquirer and Norfolk Day Book were begging that enough money that but three or four hundred prisoners were captured at Island No. 10.

The Charleston Courier says: "The following are the latest wholesale prices at the Graniteville factory: Graniteville drills, 10c.; 4-4 shirting, 10c.; 7-8 shirting, 14c.; 3-4 shirting, 11c. The prices asked in this city by some dealers are 20c. to 25c., and in Richmond 25@30c."

The Wilmington (N. C.) Journal says: "We are pleased to learn that the planters in the Pee Dee section of our State are planting little or no cotton this year. [illegible] In all the other sections of the State. Of course we speak of things generally, for there are, no doubt, some persons that will plant their full average of cotton and some, thinking that others will plant corn enough, that there will be very little cotton, and that something will turn up whereby they will make much money."

The Richmond Enquirer, of April 23, says: "The outsiders have settled into themselves without knowing anything about it that the object of Gen. Mason's visit to the Confederacy at this time, is to negotiate some part of a commercial treaty between France and the Confederacy. For ourselves, we know nothing authoritatively of the designs or wishes of France or the Government of the Confederate States, and we can only speculate with the rest. The Minister has left the city, but before doing so had one or two interviews with the authorities. Beyond this fact nothing of his mission has transpired."

Dr. Lenoirs, of New-Orleans, says the Richmond Enquirer, of April 23, has arrived in this city, and is stopping at Mrs. Stuart's, on Ninth-street, corner of Franklin. The Doctor intends going to France, where he will explain the problem of the Confederate States to the people. The Doctor very properly remarks: "Mr. Slidell is in the royal saloons; I will go in the streets to communicate with the people." "I really think," said Lord Dunsany, "that the American question cannot be settled by the belligerents." Dr. Lenoirs proposes to carry with him to France instructions from Southern patriots.

Savannah, April 22.—The Republican, of this morning, says that the post-bill from Tampa, Fla., has the following: "Word has been received of the blockading fleet within two miles of this place, has sent a boat here, and orders the town to be surrendered or be bombarded." Mayor Thomas replied, "Come along, then, and take us; I shall not surrender."

The Floridian says: "We hear from what we deem reliable authority, that an extensive "grab game" has been played in some parts of the East. Thousands of the rifles have found their way into the hands of private individuals, who seemed to have helped themselves without let or hindrance. Of the 12,000 brought by the Caroline on her last trip, it is supposed that less than three thousand remain. It is to be hoped that the Government will hold those who had them in charge to a strict accountability.

The Gainesville, Fla., Cotton States says: "We have seen an envelope stained with the heart's blood of a man who might have employed his time to a better purpose than selling himself to a despotic taskmaster. It is post-marked, 'Buffalo, New-York, February 15th, 1862,' and directed, in a neat hand, as follows: 'Lieut. Thomas A. Budd, Commanding U. S. steamer Penguin, South Atlantic Blockade, Port Royal, South Carolina.'"

The envelope was taken from the person and was stained with the blood of Lieut. Budd, who was killed during the skirmish at New-Smyrna, of which we spoke in our last issue. The letter, which was inclosed, was written by Mrs. Budd, to her husband, in February last; and a gentleman who read it states that she said "she never expected to see him again, as the recent battles South had clad the North in mourning."

Gen. Humphrey Marshall.—The Memphis Avalanche says: "We learn that this gallant officer has been compelled, for want of supplies, to fall back near Abingdon, Va. The Floyd Brigade is being reorganized rapidly, and will be placed under his command, and it is said he will soon be at the head of twenty thousand men, with abundant supplies, and every necessary for an active campaign."

In a late letter to some members of the Legislature, who addressed him on the subject, Gov. Brown, of Georgia, says: "I adopt your suggestions, and agree, as Governor of the State, to pay a reward of $5,000 to any person who will discover any salt springs or wells in this State which will afford salt water enough of a suitable quality to make three hundred bushels of salt per day, provided such springs or wells are located at such inland points as are free from attack by the gunboats of the enemy, and not to be within less than ten miles of the coast."

Five large church bells, to be cast into cannon, were brought to Petersburgh on the Norfolk train, to be sent over to Richmond. They were contributed to the cause by the patriotic citizens of Edenton, N. C., and we hope when they are converted into cannon they may be of great use in driving the invaders from the limits of that State.—Petersburgh Express.

Col. St. Leger Grenfell, Capt. Griffin and Mr. Kinmouken lately reached Charleston from abroad. The former gentleman, who was lately a Colonel in the British army, is on his way to Richmond, desiring to enter the Confederate service.

An Atlanta paper states that a leading house in that city had a large lot of sugar and syrup at a point on a railroad near the Mississippi, below Memphis. It was on the platform, exposed to the weather. The freight from the point to Atlanta would have been about $2,600, and knowing it was wanted at Atlanta, and that his regular customers were anxious for it, offered to pay ten thousand dollars freight—four times the regular rate. Yet it could not be transported, because the Government had control of the road.

Corinth, Miss., April 10.—There is an old acquaintance here, who has strayed from Lincolndom, and finds himself in rather an embarrassing position. I refer to Mr. C. H. Kalteen, of Cincinnati, who has the misfortune to combine two very antagonistic relations—that of brother-in-law of Lincoln, with strong sympathies for the South, and a bitter hostility to the war. Mr. Kalteen comes here on private business, leaving his family and property in Cincinnati. He came with the idea that some of his relatives here were suffering for the want of many comforts and necessaries of life. He is anxious to find how different relatives are, and, having explained his purpose and feelings promptly to the military commanders here, he cheerfully acquiesces in the detention during military operations.

The Richmond Enquirer, of April 23, has this paragraph: "Some of the country people, in collusion with city extortioners, manage, we learn, to keep the market in a depleted condition, and their own purses in the ascendancy, by the very simple expedient of charging the established prices for their articles, with an additional sum for their delivery. The evasion is, therefore, complete, and it is a hard matter to say how the martial-law authorities can get around it." The Enquirer also says: "Ten prisoners of war arrived on Monday evening by the Central train, and were placed in durance upon their reception. One of the number was Lieut. Wm. Luce, a son of the Capt. Luce, of the steamer Arctic, whose loss, some years ago, created such an excitement. He was captured at Berryville. The remainder were from Winchester."

The Norfolk Day Book, of April 26, says: "Two prisoners were brought up from Yorktown, yesterday—one a private of the Fourth Vermont Regiment, named Gaman; the other a citizen, named Murray, suspected of being a spy. We learned, yesterday, from a gentleman just from Goldsborough, that another Yankee, a member of the Connecticut Cavalry, had been captured by our pickets, about eight miles from Newbern, and sent to Kinston, where he was safely lodged in jail."

Personal.

—A letter from Parson Brownlow, dated Bordentown, N. J., states that he expects to be in this City in a short time. Gen. Cass, of Ohio, is with him, and will assist at the reception, which we understands awaits him, and of which full particulars will be given in the papers. While in this neighborhood, the Parson will be the guest of Hon. George B. Lincoln, the Postmaster of the City of Brooklyn. We hear that he will speak at a mass meeting to be held in Plymouth Church, at which time he will narrate his views and experiences; particularly the latter.

—Private letters received in this City, from the gallant Commander of the Western flotilla, represent him as being seriously ill. The wound in his foot has become very much inflamed, and the neglected inflammation has extended the length of his entire leg, and now threatens his side. He has written for relief to the Navy Department, but with no gratifying result, and he fears that his limb, if not his life, is in danger.

—The Paris correspondent of the London Morning Star writes, on the 10th inst.: "Mr. Adams, the United States Minister to London, is still in Paris. He is accompanied by Mrs. and Miss Adams. Mr. Thurlow Weed also has not left town, but remains at the Hotel de Lille et d'Albion. He will proceed next Saturday to Brussels, and leave that city in the course of another week for Rome. The attitude taken by the French Administration in respect to American affairs gives the greatest satisfaction to the Unionists in Paris. The Secessionists are very much dispirited at the tone shown in the French journals and in general society on the Slavery question; but Mr. and Mrs. Slidell are personally well received in private circles, and not received at all in the official world. Their manners are considered pleasing, and their dinners are all that they should be. But still they are regarded as the representatives of a slave aristocracy, a thing that the highest breeding and the best cook in the world would not get over in the circles which they wish to win round to their cause. The inmates of the United States Legation are, on the other hand, exceedingly fortunate in representing a popular cause, and having the name amongst the French of representing it worthily."

—Col. T. Biglow Lawrence, who was some months since appointed Consul-General at Florence, and who obtained temporary leave of absence, that he might remain with his Massachusetts battery, has arrived in this City from Yorktown. Mr. Lawrence will leave this country in a few days for the scene of his duties at Florence.

FROM THE MISSISSIPPI FLOTILLA.

Progress of the Siege of Fort Pillow—Bombardment of the Fort—Mortar Firing—The Rebel Fleet—Contradictory Statements by Deserters.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

Memphis Navy-Yard, near Fort Pillow, Tuesday, April 29, 1862.

The way to Memphis is now fairly open. When Island No. 10—a rather indefinite term, by the by, which does not mean the Island so much as the mainland in its immediate vicinity—with all its garrison, guns and immense quantities of munitions of war, was surrendered to our army and navy, it was generally supposed that any further resistance the insurgents might offer to the progress of the Mississippi Expedition would necessarily be very feeble. Their new point d'appui, however, seems to be more tenable than the one they were so recently compelled to abandon.

In the first place, permit me to say a few words relative to the location of the rebel fortifications on the river below this point, for there seems to be a very general misunderstanding on the subject, and the numerous diagrams in the newspapers—at least, those that I have seen—seem to be designed to mystify rather than enlighten the observer.

From Columbus to Memphis, of the left bank of the river, there are four bluffs, called respectively First, Second, Third and Fourth Chickasaw Bluffs. The First is about one hundred miles above Memphis; as it does not extend to the river it is sometimes left out of the count. The Second, on which Fort Pillow stands, is six or eight miles below, and the Third about ten miles still further down. Randolph is on the Third and Memphis on the Fourth. Hatchee River separates the Second from the Third.

There is hardly an elevated spot on the river that has not, at one time or another since the breaking out of the rebellion, been more or less fortified by the rebels. In addition to Columbus, Island No. 10, Fort Pillow and Fort Randolph, an earthwork called Fort Harris—so named after the fugacious individual who recently abdicated the gubernatorial chair of Tennessee in favor of one Andrew Johnson—was thrown up a short distance above the mouth of Wolf River, which empties into the Mississippi just above Memphis, and another at a place called Mound City, three miles above that, on the Arkansas shore, near the head of the island known to steamboat men as "Paddy's Hen." President's Island—so I am informed by an expatriated Memphian—near the Tennessee and Mississippi State line, has also been fortified, out to what extent I am unable to say. This, of course, would be no impediment to the occupation of Memphis, and probably very little to that of Vicksburgh.

Fort Harris and the earthworth at Mound City are not at all formidable. Neither was intended to mount more than eight or ten guns, and both are now without any. Fort Randolph, however, was constructed with more than ordinary skill, and was designed to mount a large number of guns, as the insurgents at one time thought of making that their strong point of defence. But their plans were afterwards changed, and every piece of ordnance, so it is said, then in position at that place, was removed to Fort Pillow and Island No. 10. It is, therefore, probable that when Fort Pillow falls, as fall it must, the last serious impediment to the free navigation of the Mississippi above Memphis will have been removed.

The flotilla of Commodore Foote and the splendid army of Gen. Pope reached this point last Sunday week, preceded by a fleet of rebel gunboats, which kept in sight most of the time, but always at a respectful distance. On rounding the point a mile or two below this, three shots were fired at the flagship, then in the advance, when our gunboats fell back a short distance, and made preparations for the siege.

The "situation" here is somewhat similar to that at Island No. 10, and the siege promises to be of equal duration. The opposing forces are obscured from view by a sharp peninsula, formed by a bend of the river, which above it flows in an easterly direction till it strikes the Second Chickasaw Bluff, and then turns suddenly to the southwest. This point of land is heavily timbered, but impassable now owing to the high water. The country is such that I do not think any similar trap can be set for the rebels to that in which they fell at Island No. 10. Whether it is the intention of our commanders to storm Fort Pillow, or to out-general them in some undeveloped way, I am unable to say.

It would be useless to deny, however, that the impending battle in the vicinity of Corinth has much to do with the plans of the Mississippi Expedition. If the insurgents should be routed at that point—and few persons, owing to the restrictions of the Secretary of War on the publication of news relative to the movements of troops, have any definite idea now of the strength of Gen. Halleck's army—the probability is that Fort Pillow will be immediately evacuated. With a victorious army in their rear. The fort would not long be tenable, and indeed, in that event, it would not be of the least importance to the enemy. It may be some weeks before our flotilla can cast anchor at Memphis, but that it will do so ere long, hardly admits of a doubt.

The bombardment of Fort Pillow, or rather of some batteries that line the bluff above the main work, has been spasmodic. Our mortarboats, sheltered behind the peninsula of which I have spoken, occasionally belch forth their monster shells for hours at a time, with what effect we have no means of knowing, and then relapse into a silence, which lasts for days. We never open upon the rebels that we do not elicit a prompt and vigorous response. Every shot sent there is returned with interest.

The most spirited episode of this character occurred a few evenings since, when they did some very good firing. One shot struck the gunboat Cairo, which, with others of the fleet, was lying within easy supporting distance; and a shell exploded directly over the St. Louis, one of the fragments striking one of her crew, but without injuring him severely. No other casualty has occurred on our side since the siege of Fort Pillow began.

Mortar-firing may be a very terrifying thing, for these "dogs of war" roar tremendously, shaking the hollow-sounding earth for miles around—but I am inclined to the opinion that it is generally a very harmless amusement; and, while I place very little confidence in the veracity of the rebels, I can readily credit their statement that they lost but one man at Island No. Ten. A fleet of these boats in your beautiful bay might do an incalculable amount of damage, or indeed in front of any large city, for if a shell did not explode in Printing House-square, it might in some other; but persons in so small a target as a single battery of guns, and that, too, out of sight, are not in much more danger of being hit by a mortar-shell than they are of being struck by lightning.

It is interesting to observe the operation of firing these mortars. At a distance of a mile and a half or two miles, we first observe a dense column of smoke shooting up from the mouth of the gun, and ten or fifteen seconds after hear the stunning report. From twenty to thirty seconds later, depending upon the length of the fuse, we hear the shell explode, with a dull, muffled sound, not unlike that of the mortar itself, though of course not nearly so loud. Should the shell burst in the air, a small puff of white smoke is at first discernible, which gradually assumes the form of, and indeed looks not unlike, an inverted balloon, and then slowly drifts away and dissolves into the other of heaven.

The number of gunboats in the rebel service has, I learn, been increased from six to ten. Their names and the number of guns each carries are as follows: McRae, 8 guns; Pontchartrain, 7; Lizzie Simmons, 5; Livingston, 6; Ivy, 4; Polk, 4; Price, 4; Beauregard, 4, and one, name unknown, 4. This flotilla may have a formidable look on paper, but it excites no uneasiness here. The vessels are generally converted steamboats, and a well-directed shot would probably disable any one of them.

In addition to these gunboats, we occasionally hear stories of iron-proved rams, which are coming around the point some night to sink all our gunboats and capture our entire mortar fleet. I regret to say they have not yet made their appearance.

Scarcely a day elapses that a deserter, or some one trying to make his way from secesh to a more congenial clime, does not find his way to our fleet. The stories of some of these individuals do not appear to have been well digested, and the Commodore sometimes finds it necessary for the good of our cause to furnish them men with iron bracelets and send them up the river. We have long since learned to place very little confidence in their statements.

From one of these men I learn that Fort Pillow mounts one hundred guns. A lie, undoubtedly. Another says there are but twenty in position. The truth, most probably. One pretended refugee from Memphis asserts that a portion of Van Dorn and Price's army recently passed through this city en route for Corinth, and another denies the statement in toto. Still another says the people of Memphis regard the battle of Pittsburgh as a disastrous affair, while a fourth assures me they claim it as a brilliant victory, and place their loss at only 500 men. Another—to continue this epitome of lengthy stories—says Pearson's Brigade, captured at the battle, is at Fort Pillow—a palpable lie—and that the men have been [illegible] seasonably warm, and [illegible] muskrat, those rumors [illegible] little nests of the South and West particularly were [illegible] more than I ever remember to have seen them [illegible] more blood than has yet been shed by the rebels in the siege of Fort Pillow. The chilling rains and the Novemberish atmosphere of the last few days have tended powerfully rallied us of the annoyance.

The River is now [illegible] high and [illegible] Whole [illegible] are [illegible] presenting a [illegible] desolating picture indeed.

While I have [illegible] mortars have again opened upon the enemy.

KANSAS AFFAIRS.

Arrest and Imprisonment of Col. Jennison.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

St. Louis, Mo., Sunday, April 27.

Your Kansas correspondent finds himself temporarily in this city, under a strange set of circumstances. Long ere this the unconscionous of his singular exposé of Col. Jennison has reached the general public. I came from Leavenworth in order to see the Colonel, ascertain his position, and so far as might, aid all efforts for his release. The circumstances of the arrest are so peculiar and seem to be so utterly without foundation, except that of Pro-Slavery malice, that I may be pardoned if I detail the particulars as come to me.

My previous letters have kept the reader informed of the existence of an intense feeling of dissatisfaction among the Kansas regiments. Nor was the feeling confined alone to them, but prevailed, also, among the Wisconsin and Ohio troops. With the latter it was owing to the unaccountable inactivity in military matters. They asked why it was that when within three days march of Cussus, and he needing reinforcements, they were kept idle, and finally had to march back to Lawrence? With the Kansas soldiers there was a deeper seated cause and feeling. Not only had the action of Gov. Robinson in breaking up legally organized regiments and leaving out of the reorganized ones the old and tried officers, placing in their stead men whose only qualification, if any, was that of being a politician, with votes to give or control, aroused this feeling, but far more was it excited by the installing to the District of Kansas, as commanders, of Gens. S. D. Sturgis and J. W. Denver. Two men more objectionable it would seem scarcely possible to find. Gen. Sturgis is one of those officers whose sympathies are known to be intensely favorable to the maintenance of Slavery. His associates in St. Louis, Missouri, and Kansas were of the class that are at least considered of doubtful loyalty. Gen. Denver is one of his boon companions. In addition to these peculiarities, his habits of life are disgraceful in the extreme. A hundred affidavits, from responsible citizens at Kansas City, Leavenworth and elsewhere, can be readily procured in testimony of his drunkenness and licentiousness. To the Kansas regiments he is obnoxious on account of the tyranny he manifested when the First and Second was under his command. He caused a member of the First to be publicly whipped. In the streets of Leavenworth he has reviled the Germans as abolition traitors, and ordered the town to be burnt, in one of his drunken fits. This is the man now in command in Kansas. He is an undisguised Pro-Slaveryite, who has an open and avowed dislike of Kansas men because they are the opposite.

Gen. J. W. Denver's connection with the past history of that State is well known. I am aware there is a diversity of opinion in relation to his administrative career. It is true that he did not raise armed forces to invade and subjugate the people, as did Gov. Shannon, but that was only because the time had passed for such manifestations. Gen. Denver was even a more dangerous foe. He is calculating, crafty, subtle, having the good set of counenance, [illegible] ness, and, above all, he knows "how not to do it." If I mistake not his character and history, Denver is a man who never forgives another for having defeated him. So he hates the radicals of Kansas because they utterly foiled his crafty, plausible attempt to democratize Kansas, and crush them out. I venture to declare my belief that he was more animated by a desire to rule over these men, than by any other motive, when he sought the command in Kansas. If, in the first instance, he was ordered there, in the second, the evidence shows he sought the post. Col. Jennison and Col. Mountgomery have been especial objects of his dislike—the former, in particular, coming under his lash.

Coupling the appearance of these Generals in Kansas with the publication of a most insolent semi-official article in Lawrence, sustained and supported by the patronage of Fort Leavenworth, the jubilant denunciation and threats against Anti-Slavery men indulged in, not only by this sheet, but by army officers on the streets of Leavenworth—linking these indications with the ordering to New-Mexico of the regiments which are largely composed of the old Free State fighters—was it to be wondered at that there has grown a conviction that a renewed attempt was to be made to pro-slaveryize Kansas? When there came as cumulative evidence the well-known and acted-upon Pro-Slavery sympathies of many, if not a majority of the highest officers in the army, was it strange that the suspicion became certainty in the minds of these Kansas men?

Col. Jennison is peculiarly a representative of the men made by the Kansas struggle—men who, from resistance to personal wrongs or forcible action against injustice and tyranny, have grown to convictions, and through these reach unto principles. Kansas to such men is not an episode; it is life. They are in earnest; fearfully so. They see certain things clearer than other people, because they understand the currents which control them. Therefore, Col. Jennison early determined not to go to New-Mexico,

D. T. VALENTINE, Clerk.

The Milk Trade—New Building of the Orange County Milk Association.

Following the laws of trade, by which the fair picking of supplies of small things for every-day consumption has grown from a petty business, embarked in by individual persons or small dealers into great enterprises, in which large capital and mechanical skill are employed, the supplying of milk to families in this City, in quantities of half a pint upward daily, has, under the improved order of enlarged commerce, become a branch of trade, conducted in accordance with the rules of strict honesty as the only means of insuring the permanency and security of the large amounts of capital invested in it. With the change in dealing from irresponsible venders, who purchased their stock of country dealers, and had the disagreeable duty to perform of adulterating it to meet the demand, to the present system, the producers also, are guaranteed a certain return for the milk furnished, which under the old plan of selling to small venders, they often found almost worthless. By means of the large and constant quantity of payment to the producer, the large milk establishment in New-York is enabled to dictate terms to the producer, as to perfect cleanliness in preparing the milk cans, the care essential in keeping the milk by placing the cans in running spring-water, the general temperature the milk is obtained, and above all, in enforcing the rule against watering the milk, the slightest infraction of which is readily detected by the hydrometer.

At the head of these enterprises in the City is the Orange County Milk Association, which was organized twenty years since, and in 1853 was incorporated by act of Legislature. The capital paid in is $20,000. Some of the corporators are themselves large milk producers, and their business has been so enlarged during past years, that now the City is divided up into milk districts, in each of which the association has its man employed, distributing. Over six thousand quarts are thus distributed daily by this Association. In addition to its old depôt in Harrison-Street, the Association have recently purchased the property on the corner of Greenwich and Desbrosses streets, where they have erected a fine four-story brick building, which may properly be called their Distributing Reservoir. It is fitted with immense ice-houses, and property-arranged rooms, offices, delivery rooms, &c. To guard against accidents, in case of a delay on railroads, they receive their supplies both by the Hudson River and New-York and Erie Railroads, on which they have their large refrigerator-cars, to insure the sweetness of the fluid during the hot weather. Two dozen persons are employed in the City daily, in distributing, and the highest price charged for milk delivered in the smallest quantities, even in the Winter season, is six cents a quart, while large consumers are furnished at a proper and fixed reduction of prices.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT.—Part II.—Nos. 7277, 4105, 4066, 5119, 5462, 6700, 6706, 7116, 7128, 7127, 7300, 7464, 7468. Sargeant on. White.

United States Circuit Court.

Before Judges Nelson and Shipman.

Henry C. Mitchell vs. A. G. Barclay et al.—This was a motion on the part of the plaintiff to set aside a stipulation which had been entered into between the parties that the proofs in the case should be closed on a certain day, in order that the plaintiff might give further evidence.

Judge SHALLEY, in deciding the motion, said it was made on the ground that a witness, who had been examined for the defendant, had given testimony of statements made by one of plaintiff's witnesses out of Court, tending to contradict the testimony he had given, and he said that if the Court should allow it, it would be still only one witness against another, and the Court did not deem the ground sufficient to call for the setting aside of the stipulation.

Motion denied.

The Hackley Case Still Again—Davis to have a Share in the Profits of the Contract.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice Sergeant.

Davis vs. Hackley et al.—The order in this case was yesterday agreed upon. Lawrence Donelson is to be Receiver, and after collecting the money and paying the bonds, &c., he is to pay the plaintiff one-fourth of the surplus moneys, to Hackley one-fourth, and to the Hopes the other two-fourths. The Hopes are to have nothing outside of such allotments.

Assessments, and an Ex-Street Commissioner—Review upon Certiorari.

SUPERIOR COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice Clerke.

In the Matter of the Assessment for Regulating and Grading Eighteenth-street.—Certain parties assessed in this proceeding moved for a certiorari, to bring up for review the proceedings of the Corporation in 1839, in the matter of laying an assessment, alleging that by reason of collusion between William Taylor, the then Street Commissioner and the contractor, the cost of the work was nearly double what it should have been, and for other reasons of a similar character. The motion was opposed on the part of the Corporation, on the ground, among others, that assessments for local improvements in this City cannot be reviewed by certiorari. Parties have another remedy under the act of 1836, and no one can have the benefit of either remedy, unless objections have been filed under the act of 1841. Decision reserved.

J. E. Parsons, for motion; H. M. Anderson, for the Corporation.

Attorney and Client—The Costs and Disbursements in an Unsuccessful Case.

COMMON PLEAS—GENERAL TERM.

Before Judges Daly, Brady, and Hilton.

Andrew J. Kasmine vs. William A. Brusié.—This was an action brought by the plaintiff, as assignee of Devlin & Miller, counselors at law, to recover the sum of $333 46, claimed for professional services and disbursements, and for $237 25 costs in a foreclosure suit, in which Devlin & Miller were attorneys for the defendant. The defendant alleged in his answer, that he employed Devlin & Miller to search and furnish him with a brief of title to certain lots of ground in this City, and that they gave the defendant a certificate that the title was good, and that he employed them as his attorneys in the foreclosure of a mortgage on the premises against one Finety, and others. That the premises were sold at Sheriff's sale to one Israel D. Walter, on ascertaining that the title was defective, applied to the Court to be discharged from the sale, which discharge was granted, and that the defendant suffered a loss of $1,000, by reason of the neglect of Devlin & Miller. The reasons assigned by Mr. Walter for seeking to be discharged from the sale was that the summons as published against Finety, the owner of the equity of redemption, required him to answer the complaint which was filed Jan. 11, 1859; that the order of publication was dated April 12, 1859; that after the filing of the complaint and before April, the plaintiff amended his complaint by enlarging his claim; and that the amended complaint was filed in February, 1859, and Finety did not appear, and judgment was taken for the amount claimed in the amended complaint; and that a prior mortgage for $1,418 was on the premises, and the mortgagees were not made parties to the suit, and the judgment did not provide for its payment. The Referee found in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed on the ground that the amendment made to the summons in the foreclosure suit, which struck out the names of certain defendants and inserted others, without the order of the Court being first obtained, rendered the proceedings irregular and invalid, and that an attorney cannot recover costs from his client for conducting a suit which has failed through his own negligence or ignorance; also that the taxed costs in an action to foreclose a mortgage do not belong to the attorney for the plaintiff but to the plaintiff himself. Judgment reversed.

A. H. Reavey for appellant; F. N. Bangs for respondent.

Practice—Evidence—Amendment.

COMMON PLEAS—GENERAL TERM.

Before Judges Daly, Brady and Hilton.

Charlotte Weichman vs. John H. Schlobohm.—This action was brought in the Third District Court, to recover three months' rent against the defendant, as surety for the lessee. Judgment having been rendered for the plaintiff, the defendant appealed to the Common Pleas, on the grounds, among others, that the Justice erred in excluding evidence of fraud in procuring the signature of defendant to the instrument sued upon, and also that the Justice erred in refusing to allow defendant to amend his answer so as to set up such fraud.

The respondent's counsel urged that the Justice was correct in both his rulings, on the grounds, first, that the fraud attempted to be set up was the fraudulent representations of the lessee to the defendant, to which the plaintiff, or her agents, were never, in any way, parties or privies; for in an action on a surety-bond, it must be shown that the fraud is one to which the obligee of the bond was a party, or had knowledge; (Graves vs. Tucker, 10 S. and M., 9; Coleman vs. Bean, New-York Com. Pl., not reported,) secondly, that amendments in Justices' Courts are in the discretion of the Justice, who must judge whether the proposed amendment is calculated to promote substantial justice. (Code, sec. 94; subd. 11; Tattersall vs. Haas, 1 Hill, 56.) The judgment was affirmed.

G. A. Hosmer, for appellant; Lewis & Redfield, for respondent.

Decisions.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Judge Inlaws.

Ford vs. James and Others.—Decision—Deeds and mortgage set aside, with costs to the plaintiff against all the defendants except Williams, who must pay his own costs in the action.

Gregory vs. Wright and Others.—Decision—Deeds from John Wright, Sr., to John Wright, Jr., declared valid, and plaintiff's complaint dismissed, with costs to the defendants.

Wright vs. Veale.—Judgment in favor of the plaintiff, so that the defendant recover the land in dispute to the plaintiff, and pay the costs of the motion.

The Newark Rural Company vs. Van Brunt et al.

SUPERIOR COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice Sergeant.

THURSDAY, May 1—P. M.

The Stock Market showed a good degree of firmness to-day, after the large advance and great excitement of yesterday, and another considerable business was done at both sessions of the Board. The holders of New-York Central, Toledo, &c., availed of the rapid rise in prices since Monday to supply the demand, while on Pacific Mail and Panama the advance continued, and there was willingness to accept any material concession on Government securities. Indeed the Treasury 7.30 ₩ cent. Bonds and the Certificates of 1863 were even stronger than yesterday. The 5 ₩ cents. of 1874 fell off ¼ ₩ cent. The Border State Stocks were ¼@½ ₩ cent. easier. The Railway Mortgages were nearly all higher and in demand. The May interest was paid to-day on a good many descriptions, and the price is now quoted ex-coupon. In Erie Shares of both classes the changes from yesterday were not important, the business being unimportant. There was a reaction of ¼@½ ₩ cent. on both the Michigan Roads, and ½@¾ ₩ cent. on Illinois Central, while Rock Island, Prairie du Chien, and Cleveland and Pittsburgh were firm. The price of Gold was again firm, and at the Second Board 102¼ ₩ cent. was paid. In Illinois State Stock, the new War loan 6 ₩ cents., a heavy business outside the Board has been done within a few days at 90 ₩ cent. Since when, the price at the Board for small parcels has advanced to 91@91¼ ₩ cent. We learn that several of our prominent private capitalists have taken from $50,000 to $100,000 each of this loan. No Western State is more popular or in better credit just now than Illinois. The conspicuous gallantry and sacrifices of her army had something to do with this feeling, aside from the great natural resources of the State.

Late in the afternoon the general market was steady, with a disposition to renewed business in United States Coupon Stock of 1881, for which 97¼ ₩ cent. was bid. Notwithstanding some considerable cash sales of New-York Central by a leading Bull in the Street at 85 ₩ cent., the price left off 85 ₩ cent. bid. The principal shares closed about as follows:

The advance in the price of Gold to 102¼ ₩ cent. has stiffened the rates of Exchange on London, and leading drawers this afternoon are asking 113 ₩ cent. The quotation is 112¾@113 ₩ cent. The speculative movement in Gold since last week, has advanced Sugars 1/4@1/2 ₩ cent., and increased the price of Coffee 1/2@1 ₩ cent. Freights have gone up by steam, and during the week there has been a good business done in Cotton for Liverpool, at 3/16@1/8 ₩ cent. Stocks have been dull, and lower on the Board to-day, in spite of a good demand and an active short paper. The Banks deposited $1,037,000 with the Treasurer of the United States, on 5 ₩ cent. interest, and there seems to be little question that the $50,000,000 allowed by the Treasury Rules will be filled up by Saturday night, after which only 4 ₩ cent. will be allowed where new deposits are taken in place of the Certificates withdrawn.

The annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was happily spared a contest in the election of officers, by the consent of Mr. Francis Peabody, the old President, to serve another year, notwithstanding his recent withdrawal from active business. The previous announcement that Mr. Peabody would withdraw altogether, led to the unusual circular addressed to each member of the Chamber, in favor of constituting the leader Vice President from all participation in the new organization, and hence the prominent signs, early in the day, of a scene. The old ticket was finally selected without opposition.

The annual election for Directors of the Rock Island Railway Company will take place at Chicago, on the 6th of June. The transfers will close in this City on the 7th of May, and remain closed until the 7th of June.

The statements of the Banks of the three principal cities of the Union, for the last week, compare with the previous one, and the corresponding time of 1861, as follows:

MR. JOHN THOMPSON, editor of the Bank Note Reporter, and one of the oldest money brokers in the Street, writes as follows of the comparative value of United States securities:

"Mr. CHASE is now running his financial machinery in a way that is as sure to secure a rapid funding of the Demand Notes into the 6 ₩ cent. stocks named on the back of the recent issue of notes, as water is sure to find its own level.

If, then, a twenty-year 6 ₩ cent. Federal stock, redeemable at the option of the Government after five years, is worth more than are the other classes of Federal securities worth?

The power to redeem the twenty-year stock at the option of the Government at any time after five years, detracts from their value, as compared with a twenty-year stock not liable to such contingency, at least six ₩ cents; therefore, the sixes now on the market are worth, with accrued interest going to the purchaser, 105.

The 7 3-10 Notes earn to the purchaser, during the two and a half years they have to run, 3 ₩ cent. more interest than 6 ₩ cent. Stock, and they are fundable into twenty-year 6 ₩ cents., which are not liable to be called in before the full expiration of the twenty years; therefore the 7 3-10 Treasury Notes are worth 103.

The twelvemonth Certificates of Indebtedness are certainly 3 ₩ cent. less valuable than the 7 3-10 Treasury Notes, and further less valuable to an amount that the funding privilege is worth. An option or "call" to take a twenty-year Federal Stock at par at any time during two and a half years, would readily bring 2½ ₩ cent. on the Stock. This makes a 7 3-10 ₩ cent. Treasury Note worth 5½ ₩ cent. more than a Certificate of Indebtedness.

These estimates are carefully made, but it should be remembered that they are on the basis of a 6 ₩ cent. contingent Stock, or the Stock into which the legal tender notes are fundable, at par."

Among the 1st of May changes in the Street, we notice that Mr. M. C. MORGAN has retired from the house of WINSLOW, LANIER & Co., the copartnership having expired by limitation, and the business will be continued by the remaining partners at No. 52 Wall-street. Mr. MORGAN will transact business

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

The fall of Fort Macon, commanding the harbor of Beaufort, N. C., is announced this morning. This news, as did that of the fall of New-Orleans, comes to us from the rebels, but, of course, its authenticity cannot be doubted. It is contained in a copy of the Richmond Enquirer, to which paper it is telegraphed. The report states that the surrender was conditional—the officers being allowed to leave with their side-arms. We shall soon have further details of this new triumph of the National arms, from our Special Correspondent with Gen. BURNSIDE's command.

There is no longer a doubt that New-Orleans is in possession of our forces, as the official correspondence which preceded the surrender is published in our columns this morning. On Saturday last, it appears, Commodore FARRAGUT made a formal demand upon the Mayor of the City for the surrender, coupling it with a request that he should hoist the National flag over the City Hall, the Custom-house and the Mint. To this the Mayor returned a somewhat shuffling and grandiloquent answer, more remarkable for sound than sense, in which he says, he sees no occasion to surrender to Commodore FARRAGUT what is already in his possession. His epistle is a curious production. It will be seen from Commodore FARRAGUT's letter that helpless women and children were fired upon in the streets of the City, for expressing the appearance of the "old flag" once more.

We have advices from Pittsburgh Landing to noon of Wednesday, at which time the expected great battle had not commenced, though the preparations for it were being pushed rapidly forward. As one of the preliminaries, the rebel communication with the Northwest, by the railroad running through Purdy, had been cut off. A strong reconnoissance was pushed in that direction from our right wing on Wednesday morning, and our troops met a force of rebel cavalry, who fled in great haste, and could not be rallied. They were pursued to Purdy, of which place our men took possession, while two bridges were destroyed, and a locomotive run into the river. All railroad communication with the country north of Corinth in these cut off, and rebel supplies from that direction are stopped. A dispatch to the Chicago Tribune, approved by Gen. STANLEY, in command at Cairo, and, therefore, not to be regarded as "contraband," states the important fact that on Saturday last the consolidated morning report of Gen. HALLECK's army showed 108,000 effective men. The magnitude of the approaching contest may thus be judged in advance.

There appears to have been no truth in the rumor, telegraphed from Cairo, that a naval engagement had taken place at Fort Wright, on the Mississippi. A dispatch from our flotilla, dated the 30th ult., confirms the fact that the rebel gunboats had left the vicinity of New-Orleans, but no hostile demonstration has yet been made by them.

There are five thousand bales of cotton, seven thousand hogsheads of sugar, and twenty thousand barrels of molasses now lying upon the levee at Memphis, of which the cotton will be burnt, and the sugar and molasses rolled into the river, on the approach of the National forces.

[illegible] of the rebels in New-Mexico seems to have ended as suddenly as it began. The statement that they had evacuated Santa Fé is fully [illegible] and they are now said to be retreating [illegible] of their own from the Territory, destitute of provisions and provisions, of which it is impossible for them to get a supply in any quarter [illegible] Fé, they levied heavily on the [illegible], in some cases taking as high as [illegible] of goods and paying in Confederate [illegible]. Gen. CANBY was expected to follow the [illegible] until they made their exit from the Territory.

The Washington Intelligencer states that when Maj.-Gen. FREMONT, Gen. SANDERS and Col. [illegible] came down in the Valley organizing [illegible] under the restored Government, they met [illegible] Division of the army, composed of [illegible] Ohioans, encamped between Charleston [illegible]. They had, because separated from [illegible] and supplies, and had been forty [illegible] nights without covering. They had [illegible] nothing of the country except the [illegible] had commenced on them. Gen. [illegible], who had been detailed as a special [illegible] with division out of the wilderness, [illegible] Mineteield, was heard to say that he had never seen a better-looking body of men, or [illegible] of enduring the hardships [illegible] subject. It is said that Gen. [illegible] the division of Maj.-Gen. [illegible].

CONGRESS.

In the Senate yesterday, a number of petitions for a General Bankrupt Law were introduced. A memorial was presented from JOHN BROOK, of [illegible] asking to build a ship railroad in Washington in sixty days, and to pay $10,000 monthly for the city. A resolution offered by Mr. WILSON, of Massachusetts, relative to Kansas affairs, was laid over; also a resolution offered by Mr. DAVIS, declaring that the war shall be carried on for the restoration of the Union under the Constitution, and for no other purpose. Mr. WILSON's resolution, inquiring of the Military Committee whether any further legislation is necessary to prevent soldiers and officers from returning fugitive slaves, was debated until the expiration of the morning hour, when the Confiscation bill was taken up. Speeches were made by Messrs. WILSON, of Massachusetts, MORRILL, of Maine, HOWE, of Wisconsin, and DAVIS, of Kentucky, all in favor of confiscation in some shape. After an Executive session, the Senate adjourned.

In the House, the bill recently reported from the Military Committee, authorizing the appointment of a Board of Fortifications, to provide for seacoast and other defenses, was called up, and Mr. BLAIR, of Missouri, explained its provisions. The bill has already been published complete in the Times. Its consideration was postponed until Tuesday week. A bill for the better organization of the Adjutant-General's Department was reported from the Military Committee. A bill to render Freedom national and Slavery sectional was reported from the Committee on Territories. The House then considered the Pacific Railroad bill until the adjournment.

GENERAL NEWS.

By the arrival of the steamship America at Halifax yesterday, we receive advices from Europe three days later than by the Bremen. She left Liverpool on the 19th and Queenstown on the 20th ult. There is very little news of interest. The London Times, speculating upon the importance of the then coming struggle for the possession of New-Orleans, says that its occupation by our forces would be "a tourniquet tightened over the great artery of the seceded States." The London Herald is again urging interference in American affairs by the British Government. It was rumored in France that the police had arrested twelve hundred workmen on a charge of sedition. A dispatch from Madrid states that Spain will not, as has been asserted, withdraw her troops from Mexico, but will retain them there until the satisfaction demanded is obtained. Very little cotton was changing hands in the Liverpool market, but prices were firm. Breadstuffs were advancing, and Provisions were generally unchanged. Consols were quoted at 93¾@94 for money. American Securities were dull.

The Chamber of Commerce yesterday presented to Gen. ANDERSON and Sergeant HART, of Fort Sumter, the medals prepared in honor of the heroic defence of that National stronghold. Nearly all the old officers of the Chamber were reelected, in spite of an effort for a change in the organization. Committees were appointed to report upon the course of the Secretary in reference to a circular issued to the members; to proceed to Washington and look after the tax bill, and to forward the plan for a line of steamers from San Francisco to China. Appropriate resolutions were passed in regard to the death of R. C. GOODHUE, an esteemed member of the Chamber.

The Board of Councilmen held their regular meeting, yesterday, but had a very slim attendance, partly on account of the weather, and it being May-day. The business transacted was generally routine, being action upon "general orders" heretofore noticed. A communication was received from the Street Commissioner, in answer to a resolution of inquiry concerning the Telegraph poles throughout the City. A report in favor of directing the Ninth-avenue Railroad Company to take up the rails in Greenwich and Washington streets was laid over. The Board of Aldermen, also, met with a full Board, and the official proceedings will be found in another portion of the paper.

Mr. C. C. CAMPBELLEN, for many years a prominent politician of this State, died at his residence at West Neck, Long Island, on Wednesday, in the seventy-sixth year of his age. He was originally a successful merchant of this City, afterwards represented it in Congress for many terms, where he took a leading part, and he was appointed Minister to Russia under the Administration of VAN BUREN. He was a man of great practical sense and of inflexible honesty, and the City of New-York has seldom sent to the National Councils a person more worthy of her metropolitan position.

Major-Gen. MITCHEL, thirty years ago, during the famous bank riots in Cincinnati, when the city government was at the mercy of the mob, restored order in a few hours, by his personal daring and command of men. Celerity of movements is always one of his characteristics.

The official report of the part taken in the battle of Shiloh, by the Second Division of Gen. BUELL's Army, Brig.-Gen. A. D. McCOOK commanding, has just been published. He applauds the courage of his men most emphatically. The day before the battle they marched 22 miles, and the night before going into action many of them stood without sleep in the streets of Savanna. He calls particular attention to the distinguished conduct of Col. JACOB AMMEN, of the Twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteers, commanding the Tenth Brigade. "The cool and vigorous method in which he fought his brigade, protecting all the while the left flank of the army, gave me," remarks Gen. McCOOK, "a profitable lesson in the science of battle."

Gen. LOVELL, of whom we hear at New-Orleans, in command of the rebel troops, is the great-grandson of "Master LOVELL," famous in his day in Boston; and the father of this officer was JAMES LOVELL, who held a place in the Boston Custom house during the administrations of JEFFERSON and MADISON. Gen. LOVELL was born in Boston, and, we believe, has relatives now residing in that vicinity.

A letter from the ship S. G. Glover, which arrived at Madras from Boston on March 8, states that she was chased by a supposed privateer on Dec. 2, in latitude 23° north, longitude 32° 30' west, but that by crowding on all sail she managed to elude the suspicious craft.

The ship Undaunted, of Boston, Capt. ELLIOT, was at Ship Island on the 14th inst., loading cotton for Boston from prizes. She will also bring about 200 invalided soldiers. The Undaunted was expected to sail about April 24.

On April 10, the gunboat Huron captured a schooner loaded with cotton attempting to run the blockade of Charleston. The prize is estimated to be worth $10,000.

A dispatch from LANE ANDERSON, dated Cincinnati, April 30, announces the arrival there of the remains of Gen. C. F. SMITH. Mrs. SMITH is now in Philadelphia, awaiting their arrival at that city, where they will be interred.

On Tuesday evening last, the colored people of New-Haven commemorated the passage of the act emancipating slaves in the District of Columbia by a public meeting in Temple Hall. Rev. A. G. BEMAN presided, and addresses were made by Rev. Drs. BACON, Rev. J. B. C. ABBOTT, and others.

PHILOMEN HILDEBRAND has instituted a suit against WM. LILL, a well-known citizen of Chicago, alleging seduction and breach of promise to marry, and laying damages at $50,000. Mr. LILL has been arrested, and held to bail in the sum of $20,000.

There was a rumor in circulation at Fortress Monroe on Tuesday that 35 men, belonging to the Fifth Maryland Regiment, stationed at Newport's News, had deserted, and gone over to the enemy. Ten of them are said to have gone on Saturday night, and the remaining fifteen went on Sunday evening. The boats of the Cumberland and Congress, which were hauled upon the beach after the destruction of those vessels, are missing, and it is said that the deserters took them. The Maryland Fifth was raised in Baltimore and the adjacent counties as a State Guard, not to be sent out of the State, but to remain and do guard duty along the lines of the railroads. Finally, the regiment were asked if they would go out of the State to fight for the Union. It was put to vote, and there were only three dissenting voices out of the whole regiment. These three were promptly discharged, and the others were sent to Newport's News.

All boats leaving Cairo for the Tennessee River have guns placed upon their bows, and one upon each side, besides an armed guard upon the hurricane deck, to repel any attempt of guerrillas to board the boat.

In argument in the Supreme Court yesterday, before Justice BARNARD, the order in the Hackley case was at last agreed upon and determined. BOOKMAN is recorder, and DAVIS, the plaintiff, is allowed to "choose and draw alike" in the profits of the contract. In the same branch of the Court, before Justice GEDNEY, certain parties moved, by certiorari, to bring up for review the proceedings of the Corporation in 1860, in the matter of regulating and grading Eighth-street, alleging fraud and collusion between the then Street Commissioner, WILLIAM TAYLOR, and the contractor for the work, by which the disbursements were alleged to be nearly double what they should have been. Decision in the matter was reserved.

The Stock Market, with less excitement than on Wednesday, was generally firm yesterday, and finally closed steady. United States 6s, 97½; New-York Central, 86; Gold advanced to 102¼@¾, and Exchange to 112½@113 ⅞ cent.

The rain-storm, yesterday, seriously impeded business operations. Breadstuffs were less active; Flour, Rye and Oats were firmer; Wheat and Corn steady. The movements in Provisions were restricted, but prices were well supported. Sugars were in moderate request. Whisky was cheaper. A number of auction sales of Dry Goods took place, at which fair prices were realized for all desirable articles. The freight market was quiet, but rates were advancing.

Yorktown in 1781 and 1862.

The army commanded by Gen. McCLELLAN has now been before Yorktown precisely the period it took WASHINGTON to reduce that stronghold, in the memorable siege of '81. This period has been in both cases filled up in precisely the same manner—the construction of lines of offensive works. To make the parallel complete, it only remains that the same result should follow the operations of Gen. McCLELLAN as attended the preparations of Gen. WASHINGTON, namely, the surrender of the enemy's force. Three weeks WASHINGTON employed in weaving a web around CORNWALLIS at Yorktown. For three weeks has Gen. McCLELLAN been doing the same thing for the present rebel force, on the grander scale and with the vastly more destructive enginery of modern warfare. When the British General saw what the American army had done, he realized that resistance was hopeless—and surrendered. No general engagement took place between the two forces. WASHINGTON sacrificed no lives, except the few that were lost in the preliminary operations. His reduction of Yorktown was a triumph of pure military strategy. If it should turn out that Gen. McCLELLAN designed to emulate his illustrious predecessor in this also? It would jump with that General's military method, and would certainly be a glorious triumph in the estimation of every right-minded man. And yet one scarcely ventures to desire that it should be so; for malignity can go very far, and there are not wanting those who would make such a bloodless victory the occasion for a renewed howl against a General whom they have determined at all hazards to defame. But whether it enters into the plan of Gen. McCLELLAN, that Yorktown shall fall into his hands as the ripe fruit of his strategic combinations, or whether he intends to hurl his vast force against the rebel line with a shock that shall shake the Atlantic coast to its foundations—one thing is certain: the crisis is impending; the gigantic preparations of the Commanding General are now complete, and any hour the electric wire may be freighted with intelligence that will be as decisive of the fate of the rebellion as the glorious tidings which WASHINGTON transmitted to the Continental Congress on the 18th of October, 1781, was decisive of American freedom and independence.

Historical analogies are necessarily imperfect, and we have no desire to establish any forced parallel between the present siege of Yorktown and that of the Revolutionary era; but there are some points of comparison and some of contrast between the two sieges, that may be profitably considered in view of impending events. We have already indicated that the preliminary operations in both investments were similar. Indeed, so marked is the analogy, that, with certain verbal substitutions, one might almost read the daily reports of progress transmitted by WASHINGTON to the President of Congress, as descriptive of operations in the peninsula to-day. Such dispatches as these are common:

"Oct. 1.—A small fire all day from our riflemen and the enemy's Yagers. On the 30th, in the morning, we discovered that the enemy had evacuated all their exterior works, and withdrawn themselves to those near the town. By this means we are in possession of very advantageous grounds, which command their line of works in a very near advance. All the expedition that our circumstances will admit is using to bring up our artillery and stores to open our batteries."

Under date of Oct. 6, WASHINGTON writes:

"We have been assiduously employed in making fascines and gabions, and in transporting our heavy cannon, mortars, and stores from Trebell's Landing, on James River. Opened trenches on the 6th October, and established our first parallel within 600 yards of the enemy's works. 7th and 8th, employed in completing the first parallel. On the 9th, the American battery on the right opened, having six 16 and 24-pounders, two mortars, and two howitzers. On the 11th October, advanced second parallel within 300 yards of the enemy's works. Only one man killed, and three or four wounded."

Again, under date of Oct. 14, WASHINGTON reports:

"The two redoubts on the left of the British line carried by assault. The firmness and bravery of the troops were admirable. They advanced under the fire of the enemy without returning a shot, and effected the business by the bayonet alone. The works are of vast importance, and from them shall enfilade the whole enemy's line."

Such is the character of the operations which WASHINGTON was conducting for the reduction of Yorktown. They extend over the whole period from the 28th of September to the 17th of October, when CORNWALLIS sent a proposition of capitulation. It is very much the character of the operations McCLELLAN has been pushing forward for the past three weeks. But, aside from this general resemblance, the proportions of the present siege take it out of all comparison with that of the Revolutionary era. It needs to say nothing of the changes time has made in the materiel and methods of warfare, nor contrast the small smooth-bore cannon of those days, and the old flint-lock muskets, grasped by the hard hands of the ununiformed yeoman militia, with the tremendous enginery and destructive missiles of modern warfare. It may, however, surprise those who have been wont to read the history of the campaigns of the Revolution only as bedaubed by patriotic rouge, to learn that the total British army at the famous siege of Yorktown numbered only a little over five thousand men, while the whole force, French and American, under WASHINGTON, did not exceed twenty thousand! The rebel force now intrenched behind its works in that locality, on the contrary, is carried as high as two hundred thousand; while the very lowest figure at which it can be placed will still make it ten times the strength of the army of Cornwallis. What the magnitude of our opposing army may be is hardly a fit subject for speculation; but we can give it no such advantage over the rebel force as WASHINGTON's army had over that of CORNWALLIS—namely, four to one; and which the Duke of WELLINGTON counted the proper proportion for a force storming intrenchments over those thus protected. Moreover, WASHINGTON had this advantage, that he commanded the upper part of the peninsula as well as the rear of Yorktown, and was thus able to weave a web completely around the British garrison, whereas McCLELLAN, approaching from below, is compelled to throw his army against a line of works that stretch across the whole peninsula.

It in novice takes from the glory that belongs to WASHINGTON thus to indicate the precise conditions of a problem which he solved with consummate skill. "No expedition," wrote FRANKLIN from Paris, "was ever better planned or better executed." But it should surely shut the mouths of those who pursue with their calumnies, to see that their inconsolate carpings, as it were, rebound on the Father of his Country. Gen. McCLELLAN has not been longer before Yorktown than was Gen. WASHINGTON, while the task before him has certainly been ten times as great. One thing we may be sure of: whatever the enemies of McCLELLAN may say of his operations before Yorktown, WASHINGTON would not regard them as tardy. Happily, the number of those who share this sentiment forms a constantly increasing majority. Even the slight glimpses the public has been allowed to catch of the gigantic work our army in the peninsula has performed—and now on the eve of having its full effect—are sufficient to inspire the amplest confidence both in the plans and the final success of the Commander of the Army of the Potomac.

The New Slave-trade Treaty.

The Slave-trade has received its death-blow, in the treaty just concluded between the Governments of England and the United States. Disguise it as we may, we cannot escape the charge, before the civilized world, of having been, to a great extent, one prime cause of the immunity afforded, for many years past, to this accursed traffic. Under the pretence of our national dignity, and the consequent susceptibility respecting a right of search, the American flag has been the protection to the abandoned of all nations, who were bent upon making money in this unhallowed manner, against not only the feelings of all Christendom, but our own professions.

But this was while the destiny of this great nation was wielded by men who—so far from being anxious for the curtailment of Slavery—have deliberately inaugurated a war for the overthrow of our nationality, merely because they were losing the power of extending the influence of the "peculiar institution." Now that the voice of the North, which means the vast majority of the nation, is enabled to be heard, we see the animus of the people in the steps already taken toward ridding us of this foul blot upon our country's escutcheon. The conviction and execution of the pirate GORDON was the first tangible proof given of the little sympathy which we had with slave-stealers, and this new treaty—emanating evidently from the clear, logical pen of WILLIAM H. SEWARD—is still stronger evidence, if further evidence was needed.

Henceforth the Government of the United States washes its hands completely of all complicity in the Slave-trade, and its iniquities can never, directly or indirectly, be brought home to us. Henceforth qualified officers of the British navy can, with certain testimonials, and within certain available latitudes, board any American merchant vessel as "may, upon reasonable grounds, be suspected of being engaged in the African Slave-trade, or of having been fitted out for that purpose, or of having, during the voyage on which they are met by the said cruisers, been engaged in the African Slave-trade, contrary to the provisions of the treaty; and such cruisers may detain and send, or carry away, such vessel, in order that they may be brought to trial in the manner hereinafter agreed upon." Any qualified officers of the American navy have, of course, an equal right, under the same circumstances and in the same latitudes, to do the very same to British suspected merchant vessels.

The means employed for avoiding anything like unfriendly collision in the discharge of these humane duties—the mode of bringing offenders, of either nation, to speedy and condign punishment, in the event of being proved guilty by the courts, or of compensating them in case of illegal detention—the punishment mutually agreed upon to be inflicted upon any naval officer who shall transcend his instructions,—the minute enumeration of articles which shall be considered as affording prima facie evidence that the vessel was engaged in the African Slave-trade—are all matured with the utmost circumspection, and give abundant evidence of the perfect good faith in which both contracting parties have entered into this important engagement.

Three mixed courts of adjudication, formed by an equal number of individuals of each nation—one at Sierra Leone, one at the Cape of Good Hope, and one at New-York—are to be established. The treaty is to be in force for ten years, at the end of which time either party may give notice of a wish to terminate it; and, in that case, it shall, one year afterward, cease to have effect. By that time however, it is to be reasonably hoped that the Slave-trade will have been long enough dead and buried beyond all resurrection.

It is noticeable that the admirers and defenders of Slavery on this Continent are already carping at the provisions of this able and well-intended treaty; and they do so under cover of the pleasurable prospects afforded of future entanglements and collisions with Great Britain in attempting to carry it out. But we think as little of the sagacity as we do of the patriotism of these birds of ill omen. So far from this treaty being the source of future misunderstandings with England, we consider it admirably designed to clear away one of the very few points yet remaining to create unnecessary differences between two kindred nations. It will, moreover, make our own navy more respectable, but more important among the navies of the world—by proving a Government able to make our actions, with regard to the Slave-trade, conform to little better than they have hitherto done to the spirit which we have so long professed.

ANOTHER FLICKER OF BORDER-RUFFIANISM.—It would seem that the illustrious mess-trooper, Dr. JENNISON, has achieved a victory over his Kansas persecutors. Gens. STURGIS and DENVER are said to have been relieved of their commands in the Territory, while the Doctor is relieved from his parole at St. Louis. Thus does everlasting justice vindicate itself.

Of the circumstances which brought about the imprisonment of JENNISON, a letter, in another column, from one of our Western correspondents, gives a truthful narrative. The Kansas Regiments were disgusted at the inactivity in which they were detained by STURGIS and DENVER, while Guerrs was clamoring for reinforcements, and a broad harvest of glory was ready for their sickle, not only in Arkansas, but in New-Mexico. DENVER, one of BUCHANAN's legatees in Kansas, they know as having no liking for the Territory or its people, and as capable of deliberately defeating their aspirations for fame. STURGIS, who has the reputation, justly or not, of excessive addiction to strong drink; is lavish in his professions of friendship for Slavery, and his hostility to "Abolitionists," and has followed with relentless venom such men as JENNISON, whose motive in entering the service is less patriotic than fanatic. Discouraged by the stand-still policy of his leaders, and offended by their studied neglect and insults, JENNISON resigned the command of his regiment, the resignation to take effect on the 1st of May. A day or two after, an order was received by the Lieutenant-Colonel of the regiment, directly from Gen. STURGIS, as if JENNISON had already retired. This paper JENNISON destroyed, and continued to fulfill the duties of his rank. He was, however, arrested by direction of Gen. STURGIS, who ordered him to be put in irons and conveyed to St. Louis; and thither, after sundry imprisonments by the way, and much suffering, the prisoner was carried and placed in a common jail. Prominent citizens of St. Louis interposed for his release; and he has not only been released, but his foes have been put to shame.

To place STURGIS and DENVER in Kansas was an unhappy mistake. The simple fact that their sympathies are notoriously strong for Slavery, at once raises an impassable barrier between them and the people, whose cordial confidence and support could alone give success to their military plans, and whose animosity to the peculiar Southern institution has just grounds. Their leader should have been in thorough harmony with themselves. Thus the invaluable fighting qualities of the borderers, qualities maturely cultivated in the squabbles provoked by the Pro-Slavery advisers of BUCHANAN, would have been utilized, and made to play a most effective part in the Western campaign. As it is, discontent and demoralization have crept into the ranks, and it will be hard to restore the force to its early efficiency. JENNISON has not heretofore been of incalculable service to the country, or to public order. The incident to which he was involuntarily a party, and which has procured the displacement of two incompetent commanders, is his somewhat slender title to respect.

APRIL.—There have been a greater number of important events and actions during the month of April, just closed, than in any month of the war. It has been a month of great surrenders, battles and movements. It has been illustrated by the surrender of Island Number Ten and its six thousand rebel troops; by the surrender of Fort Pulaski and its rebel garrison; by the capitulation of New-Orleans, the New-York of the South, and all its rebels, excepting those who fled. It has been crimsoned by the bloody battle of Shiloh, and by a hundred minor engagements, fought along a line of fifteen hundred miles in extent, from Yorktown to Santa Fé. It has seen the splendid march of MITCHEL and the masterly movements of POPE. It has seen the advance of McDOWELL to Fredericksburgh, and the march of Gen. BANKS toward Staunton. CURTIS' column has been moving eastward through Missouri, STEELE preparing to descend the Arkansas, and FREMONT advancing southward through Virginia. BURNSIDE has been busy in North Carolina, and the capture of Fort Macon splendidly closes the month's work. HUNTER has been drawing in his strength, preparatory to a spring upon the enemy. But the greatest work of the month, greater than the surrenders, heavier than the engagements, more trying than the marches, has been the prodigious preparation going on for the two decisive battles of the war—that under Gen. McCLELLAN, on the York River, and that under Gen. HALLECK, on the Tennessee. The month which has just come in, the sweet month of May, will, in all human probability, be that in which the purpose and result of all these preparations will appear. So that, though the operations of April have been immeasurably important and splendid, they bid fair to be entirely overshadowed by the operations of May.

STILL ANOTHER FORT RECOVERED.—From the rebels this morning we give the news that Fort Macon, near Beaufort, N. C., has surrendered to Gen. BURNSIDE. This nearly completes the work of recapturing from the rebels the forts and strongholds on the Southern seaboard. A short distance further down the coast, at Wilmington, are Forts Caswell and Johnson, still in rebel hands; and some distance southward still is Fort Sumter and the other forts in Charleston harbor. When these fall into our hands, we will have repossessed every fort of consequence on the Southern Atlantic coast. Our correspondent with Gen. BURNSIDE informed our readers a fortnight ago that Fort Macon had been invested, and that the work of reducing it had begun by slow bombardment. This is now the consummation of the work—finished, as nearly all of Gen. BURNSIDE's operations are finished, with perfect success. It was evident, when BURNSIDE had taken Newbern, that this fort must fall; and when he detached a body of his troops down the railroad to cut off the retreat of the garrison, the result was inevitable. They have been shut up in the fort now for over a month; and in that time surrendered either before hunger or battery—as all events before Sebastopol. It would be well for North Carolina now, if she would adopt the line of policy attributed to her of late, and voluntarily return to the Union. One year of rebellion has been, indeed, a sufficient and unfortunate year for her.

Now let Gen. HUNTER look out for his fort. It is quite time that the freedom shrieks and cackle of South Carolina were silenced and of Fort Sumter.

THE INVESTIGATIVE COMMITTEE GOING HOME.—The WAR WITH Investigating Committee is realizing the truth that curses come home to roost. Having investigated for others, and been the cause of much investigation in others, they find themselves at last very unceremoniously and uncomfortably investigated by the House, whose delegated authority they have, it seems, been using more freely than prudently. The truth is, this Committee should have outslept. It was raised with a view to making a case against FREMONT, to exposing the frauds in the War and the corruption in the Navy Department. Accordingly it visited St. Louis, and investigated, without calling before it either FREMONT or McKINSTRY; it followed the unhappy Commodore into the inkiest recesses of the World's press-room, and, as if bottled porter and chip hats for the army were not enough, charged him with vast balances which, alas! he had never handled; it overhauled the brokerages of the opulent MORGAN, and when found, made a note of some $75,000, to which that Dives was not entitled. But whatever merit and demerit there may have been in these partial and eccentric inquiries, the premature publication of so much of the testimony, strictly ex parte, which related to FREMONT, proved that the Committee conducted its inquest in no judicial spirit, but rather with the ardor and eagerness of detectives, thirsting for the magnificent popular reward of successful zeal. With this discovery the public confidence in the Committee vanished. Its usefulness ceased. Its bulky volume of evidence published at midwinter nobody read. The inquiry into the contracts for arms, the Secretary of War placed in better hands. For all practical purposes the Committee has been simply a source of useless expense and popular annoyance.

The course of the House of Representatives would seem to be simple. Let the Committee be discharged forthwith, and let another be appointed to examine and report upon the honesty, fairness and impartiality with which these gentlemen have executed their functions. So shall the public and the interests of public morality be served.

BOGUS IMPORTATIONS OF "BEVERAGE."—The Express and the Staats Zeitung set all the glasses in Liquordom a-jingling by their announcement that the General Term of the Common Pleas had decided the old liquor cases against the People. They even put in the mouths of Judges DALY, HILTON and BARRY the arguments with which they justified the conclusion arrived at; and the Zeitung comments on the bearing of the decision on "the oppressors and tormentors of the tavernkeepers"—meaning the Police—and on "the much-abused McCUNN," who is thus "gloriously vindicated" from the aspersions of "the Anglo-American organs of temperance fanaticism."

Unhappily, "human nature" has not yet become so universally educated, so magnanimous, so broad and grand in its scope, as not to be narrowed down to any one idea in regard to any one proposition;" or, "to speak more plainly," the whole thing is bogus. "McCUNN on Beverages" awaits vindication; the Common Pleas has not spoken. "I was directed to state," says the Clerk of that Court, "that the Court at General Term has not made any decision upon the questions presented to it in the liquor cases, nor has any intimation been given by either of the Judges as to what the disposition will be. After the argument, the cases were reserved for decision, without the expression of any opinion whatever."

Had the reporter made a little too free with "beverage, beveragium, or biberagium?"

CITY POSTAL REFORMS.—The new Postmaster is vindicating his claim to the good things we were pleased to say of him at the time of his appointment. In another column we print a programme for the reception and delivery of letters at the several City stations, which inaugurates a new era in that department of the service. Seven times daily will the letters be carried from the Post-office to the stations; and as often will the letters deposited at the stations be transmitted to the Post-office. From the lamp-post depositories, which now number a fraction less than six hundred, the letters will be gathered five times a day; and four times daily will the carriers deliver letters. While this increase of activity and efficiency is a capital omen for the future, we are gratified to know it is but an instalment of the reforms and ameliorations which Mr. WAKEMAN contemplates. The City has at last an alive Postmaster.

PHILOSOPHY OF EMPTY HOUSES.—The Democrat thinks the City is likely to be depopulated by the operation of the Concert Saloons act, and like "foolish laws." We quote:

"DEPRESSED OF POPULATION.—To judge by the many dwellings which are not yet rented, notwithstanding the nearness of moving day, the number of inhabitants is decreasing. The war has less to do with it than the foolish laws which are to be enforced in the City, according to the country-village ideas of hypocritical reformers."

There is this consolation, that the remaining citizens may hope to dwell in a City whose principal thoroughfare has ceased to be a continuous brothel.

A CAST-AWAY LECTURER.—A large audience assembled at Continental Hall, on Monday evening, to listen to a lecture by Mr. THOMAS TWEED, on the latest questions of the war. Shortly after 8 o'clock the Chairman received the following telegraphic dispatch from Mr. TWEED: "I am detained at Fort Lafayette, without accident, and cannot return home in time, to the audience three cheers in advance for the abolition of Slavery from every square inch of the Republic." The reading of this dispatch excited the suspicion that Mr. TWEED's absence was by force of circumstances, and the statement elicited three hearty cheers. Mr. TWEED will deliver his lecture this evening, May 2, at the same place.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The London Times editorially expatiates on the importance of the struggle for New-Orleans, and says the occupation of that place by the Federals would be a stunning blow right over the great artery of the seceded States.

The Morning Herald (conservative organ) has a vigorous editorial on the protracted continuance of the American struggle. National predictions to the contrary notwithstanding. It sees no signs of exhaustion in the North, and no signs of discouragement in the South, and believes that no probable military achievement on either side would suffice to bring either party to terms. With these views, our commercial and political policy should be regulated on the conclusion that a speedy peace is hopeless.

The Herald further says that the Government of Washington should be permitted to have one more chance, and if they fail, the great Powers should peremptorily intervene on behalf of the general well-being of mankind. That this has not been done before is owing to the generosity of England, as France was ready; but it is time that England should cease to stand between her own people and the relief they need.

The general news, as well as the commercial, is almost a blank.

Vocal Gymnastics.

An exhibition of the class in vocal gymnastics, under training of Prof. HAUSMANN, took place on Wednesday, at FERRIS' Female Institute, on Madison-avenue. The young ladies ranged in age from near twenty to very small girls of some seven years. The spectators were invited friends of the pupils, and clergymen, professors and others interested in promoting intellectual advantages in our educational institutions. The exercises, apart from their exceeding value in developing the bronchial and pulmonic muscles, are beautiful to the looker-on. The Quaker or Methodist may thus enjoy all the charm of grace to be witnessed in the ballroom, without the disallowing adjuncts. The eminent Professor stands in the midst of his fair pupils, clad in an unadorned suit of gray flannel, with the hair combed back from the skin, of course, but no perfumery, forming a wholesome contrast to the fashionable mode of Queen Fashion. The Professor is evidently powerful upon her majesty above named, and openly avows that put-and-out Bloomerism is inadmissible. The progress of the several classes attached to our first schools in this City and Brooklyn is eminently satisfactory to the principals, who introduced the method rather as an experiment. The "Charge of the Light Brigade" was among the pieces selected to display the versatility of elocutionary organs, and also some very interesting action of the respiratory organs both with and without expression of feature. Something new under the sun was developed in what was announced as phonetic spelling, in which the word was first spelled as it sounded, and afterward pronounced as usual. The dumb-bell exercise (would you it is here practiced with wooden pieces) was, of course, a laughable amusement for our young in the period at chating is in its season. If the more suitable hearts would only introduce it at home, it needed but open air and free space to make a part of this course, at least a standing and healthful resource for exhilaration to ennuyee City belles, or healthful reaction to the contracted and stooping attitude of those confined to shops or working tables. An address, setting forth the object and progress of the system in female schools, was delivered by Rev. Isaac Ferris, D. D. A class of gentlemen is already formed, who are very much in favor of the exercises for their own or other vocal collings.

BOARD OF COUNCILMEN.

STATED SESSION—THURSDAY, May 1, 1862.
8 o'clock P. M.

The Board met pursuant to adjournment, in their Chamber, No. 16 City Hall.

COMMUNICATION.

A communication was received from the Street Commissioner in reply to preamble and resolution relative to the authority any party or parties have for placing or erecting telegraph poles in the streets of the City. The Commissioner states that the Independent Telegraph Company, the only one raising poles at the present time, have been waited upon by the officers of the Department and questioned as to their authority. They referred to two resolutions passed by the Councilmen, one December 24, the other January 20, 1862. On examination it was found that the first resolution was not approved by the Mayor, and that the second had not been concurred in by the Aldermen. Therefore, the Department notified said Company to remove their poles. In their failure to comply therewith, the Corporation Counsel was informed of the matter, with the view of prosecuting said Company.

Which was received and entered on file.

Its popularity is so great, that there is a quack doctor in the City that has not attacked it; and when they find their lies are not so easily swallowed as they had expected, that they can make it. It is $1 a vial, and cannot be obtained of any agent but at the only office, No. 3 Division-st. Book for 15 three cent stamps, 300 pages, 100 colored illustrations. The best work out.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

Trouble with Fugitive Slaves in the District of Columbia.

Conflict of Military and Civil Powers.

The Subject of Confiscation in the Senate.

FROM SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, May 1.

THE VIEWS OF GEN. HUNTER ON EMANCIPATION.

Upon the best of authority for asserting that Mr. LINCOLN, the President, on his recent visit to HUNTER, did not see Jno. DAVIS, and had no conversation in his official capacity with any such officer. The idea is propagated that no persons in authority.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN THE DISTRICT.

It is asserted, upon good authority, that since the Maryland Emancipation bill passed, over one thousand fugitive slaves have come into this District from Maryland. Most of them throw themselves under the protection of the Military Committee, commanded by Gen. WADSWORTH. Notwithstanding that most of these women declare that their masters are rebels, many of the latter have caused writs for the return of their chattels to be put into the hands of Marshal LAMON, and under the Fugitive Slave law he must execute the warrants or suffer the extreme penalty of the law, which is very severe. The slaveowners threaten him with suits in each case if he fails to execute the writ. The fine in each case is one thousand dollars. Every attempt thus far made to return the alleged fugitives has been resisted by the military authorities, who declare that the slaves are the property of rebels. Whether they are or not, the Marshal says the claimants all express a willingness to take the oath of allegiance. This looks very much like a conflict between the civil and military authorities. Congress should interfere at once in the Maryland bill, or we shall have any quantity of fugitive slave claims pending before Congress very shortly.

CRIMES OFFENSIVE FOR THE NATIONAL BAR.

A bill was reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, to-day, amendatory of the act to provide additional revenue from the imports, to pay the interest on the public debt, and for other purposes, approved the 5th of August last. It allows such portion of the tax as may be assessed by any State or Territory, or by the District of Columbia, to be paid and satisfied in whole or in part, by the release of such State, Territory or District, duly executed to the United States, of any liquidated and determined claim pertaining thereto, of equal amount against the United States, provided that in case of such release such State, Territory or District shall be allowed the same abatement of the amount of such tax as would be allowed in case of the payment of the same in money. This act shall be construed as applying to such claims of States for reimbursement of expenses incurred by them in enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying and transporting troops, employed in aiding to suppress the present insurrection against the United States, as shall be filed with the proper officers of the United States before the 30th of July next, and in such cases the abatement of fifteen per centum shall be made on such portion of said tax as may be paid by the allowance of such claims in whole or in part, the same as if the final settlement and liquidation thereof had been made before the 30th of June.

SEIZING THE SLAVES OF REBELS.

The following is the bill introduced by Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, providing for the freedom from servitude of the slaves of rebels engaged in or abetting the existing rebellion against the Government of such United States. Some importance is attached to this bill, from the fact that Mr. ELIOT is Chairman of the Select Committee of the House to whom the whole subject of confiscation has been referred.

SEC. 1. If any person or persons within the United States, or within any State or Territory thereof, shall, after the passage of this act, willfully engage in armed rebellion against the Government of the United States, or shall willfully aid or abet such rebellion, every such person shall thereby forfeit all claim which such person may have to the service or labor of any other person or persons commonly known as slaves, and the slave or slaves of such person or persons are hereby declared free and forever discharged from such servitude, anything in the laws of the United States, or of any State, to the contrary notwithstanding; and whenever at any time after the passage of this act the person claiming such labor or service by claim thereto, it shall be a full and sufficient answer to such claim that the claimant did engage in the rebellion aforesaid, or did, by word or deed, support or abet the rebellion of this act.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, that whenever any person claiming to be entitled to the service or labor of any other person shall seek to enforce that claim by or on behalf, in the first instance, and before any judicial tribunal, for the surrender of the person claimed to be so held to service or labor, or shall, in any way, claim, demand, or attempt to take such person by force, or shall, in the first instance, and before any judicial tribunal, not only deny the fact that such person has been held to service or labor, but also that such person has been in any way aided, assisted, or encouraged the existing rebellion against the Government of the United States.

SALE OF THE CUMBERLAND.

The French war steamer Cassard left here this morning.

THE REPORTERS.

Some New-York dailies have claimed the entry of certain freighters at the rate of 10 per centum, but the Secretary of the Treasury, in his appeal, has decided that they must pay 20, stating that the term employed in the tariff act of August last, "Freebers," is a general one, unaccompanied by any qualification as to variety or condition; also, that cotton twine, although the proportion of colored in the whole fabric is small, yet introduced, it is believed, for the purpose of making the article more beautiful and thereby enhancing its value, must pay a duty of 10 per centum additional to the one and a-half cents per square yard provided by law.

THE PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, May 1.

Mr. HOWARD, of Michigan, (Rep.,) presented petitions in favor of a General Bankrupt law.

Mr. WILKE, of Indiana, (Union,) presented a memorial of JOHN EADES, offering to build a City Railroad in Washington in sixty days, and pay $10,000 annually to the city.

Mr. WILKE also presented petitions for a Bankrupt act, and said that none of them are from Indiana.

Mr. WILSON, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) offered a resolution, that the Secretary of War report whether one FREDERICK ENDEY, who murdered WM. PHILLIPS in Leavenworth, Kansas, in 1855 or 1856, has been appointed to any place in the Department of Kansas.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas, (Rep.,) said the Government had before it to-day the Kansas difficulty, and he presumed it would correct the evil.

The resolution was laid over.

Mr. DAVIS, of Kentucky, (Union.) offered a resolution declaring that the war now carried on by the United States of America shall be vigorously prosecuted and continued, to compel obedience to constitutional laws in the limits of every State and Territory by all the citizens and residents thereof, and for no further end whatever.

On motion of Mr. SUMNER, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) the resolution was laid over.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, of Massachusetts, the resolution asking the Military Committee to inquire whether further legislation was necessary to prevent soldiers and officers from returning fugitive slaves was taken up.

Mr. SUMNER said he was glad the Senator from Iowa, in his speech, had called attention to some officers concerning their treatment of fugitives. One General, who lately made an order returning fugitives, was a native of Massachusetts, and he (SUMNER) used his influence to get him appointed. If he had known that Gen. HOOKER would have made such an order, he never would have tried to get him an appointment. When a General falls in battle there is honor in it, and we regret his death; but where a General fails as Gen. HOOKER has fallen, there can be nothing but regret. He referred to the order of Gen. DOUBLEDAY, and contrasted it with that of Gen. HOOKER, saying that he (DOUBLEDAY) was an honor to his country. Mr. SUMNER then referred to the course of Gen. McCOOK at the West, and also to the conduct of the Provost-Marshal of Louisville, as being disgraceful to the army. Mr. SUMNER also read an account of how the blacks were oppressed at Louisville.

Mr. DAVIS asked Mr. SUMNER where he got his account.

Mr. SUMNER said from the newspapers in New-York.

Mr. DAVIS had no doubt of the falsity of the account.

Mr. WILSON, of Massachusetts, said he had abundant evidence of the disgraceful treatment of fugitive slaves by portions of the army.

Mr. SUMNER also referred to the return of fugitive slaves from the camps of Gen. BUELL, and the order of Gen. HALLECK excluding all fugitives from the lines of Gen. HALLECK. He (SUMNER) said the order was unconstitutional, absurd, deficient in common sense, an outrage upon common humanity, and unworthy of a soldier. Such an order would exclude all the valuable information received from fugitives, such as, for instance, the capture of New-Orleans and the evacuation of Fredericksburgh.

Mr. SAULSBURY, of Delaware, (Dem.,) offered as an amendment to the resolution the following:

"And also to inquire what further legislation is necessary to prevent the illegal capture and imprisonment of free white citizens of the United States."

Mr. SAULSBURY referred to the number of persons taken from the States of Delaware and Maryland. They had been seized by the military authorities and dragged away to forts and prisons, and after being kept a week or two, were discharged, because no fault could be found with them. These men belong to a class who are deemed to be of no account, and whose interests do not appear to be cared for. They unfortunately are free white persons. These men, who had committed no offence, were seized in violation of every law and every right. If the wrongs of the negro are to be redressed, he could only ask that the same justice might be meted out to white men. He asked nothing for men who were disloyal to the Government; he would have them punished to the full extent of the law.

The morning hour here expired, and the Confiscation bill was taken up.

Mr. WILSON, of Massachusetts, offered an amendment to the sixth section of Mr. COLLAMER's substitute, authorizing the President to make a proclamation, and free the slaves of those who continued the rebellion for thirty days after the passage of this act. He said he was willing to contest that his chief solicitude was for the emancipation of the slaves of rebels. He was in favor of the confiscation of the property of the leaders, and an amnesty to the masses, but Slavery was the cause of the rebellion, and was a great rebel agent, and he did not see how loyal men could be friends of Slavery. Slavery has been for thirty years aggressive on everything good and free in the Government. He saw no soldiers sick or wounded or lying in the grave but he felt that Slavery had done it, and Slavery had been the murderer of these brave men. Slavery was the great enemy, and the only enemy of this country, and to-day this criminal and murderer is trying to throttle the Government, and destroy the National life. Seeing and feeling all this, he would strike at Slavery, and destroy it if he could. He thought that Congress had the right to free the slaves of all rebels, and if they adjourned without putting such a law on the statute-books, he believed they would be false and recreant to the country. Slavery scoffed and jeered at the Declaration of Independence, and derided the toiling millions of Northern mudsills. It made its tools hate the people and the Government, and wherever Slavery is strongest, there is the most disloyalty and the most hatred of the Government. If we would have peace, we must destroy Slavery, which is the great cause of the rebellion and disloyalty. He believed we had gone to the extreme verge of constitutional rights, and if there was any doubt, he would give it in favor of his country, and not in favor of Slavery. He had no doubts of the policy of this measure. In almost every measure for the support of the Government it has been objected, that it would offend the rebels, and perhaps men of the Border States. He was tired of all these objections. As long as Slavery stands, there stands an enemy that can never love the Government, or be loyal. Destroy it, and love for the Union and Constitution will return, together with a feeling of shame, that men could have been so perverted by the monster of Slavery.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, (Rep.,) said he proposed in a few words to attempt to analyze some of the proposed measures. Some bills, like those of the Senators of New-York and Ohio, are bills that meant to affect something and touch the rebellion, and they are produced by men who mean to crush the rebellion; the other bills are of a class not intended to effect anything, and are the products of men who do not mean to do anything. The bill before the Senate is calculated to strike directly at the rebellion. This bill simply authorizes the President to seize such an amount of property as he deems military necessity requires for the safety and the welfare of the United States. Does anybody oppose this? This is to be done not for purposes of emancipation, but for the suppression of the rebellion. Who opposes that? This bill is effective, and designed for the present state of affairs. The policy of the other bills is to do nothing to put down the rebellion, but, somehow, after the rebellion has been put down, to turn the nation into criminal courts for punishment. This bill simply forfeits the property of a certain class of persons, and the forfeiture is to be enforced by the President only in the prosecution of the war and the suppression of the rebellion, and when suppressed, all power under this bill is at an end; but the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont provides for the punishment for treason of every person who has taken up arms against the Government; then it provides that such persons shall be forever disqualified from holding office, and then superadds the penalty that the slaves of such persons shall be freed. The provisions of this substitute are much more sweeping than those of the bill reported from the Committee. The Senator from Vermont in his speech declares that we have no right to interfere with Slavery, yet his bill authorizes the President arbitrarily to free every slave in the country. Then he referred to the substitute offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, (COWAN,) and contended that it was more sweeping than any other, but the fact was that these other bills were not intended to do anything. Congress, the great war-council of the nation, ought to pass the resolution to take the responsibility and to advise and counsel the President, and not to know all the responsibility on him.

Mr. HOWE, of Wisconsin, (Rep.,) disclaimed any [illegible] on the subject, but voted to refer it to a committee. He did not believe the proposed amendment would do any good. He did not believe the proposition of Mr. WILSON, of Massachusetts, to give the President the power of emancipation in favor of some contraband slaves, was wise, but would not say so he thought that not, for he had not had time to examine it.

Mr. DAVIS asked to have the amendment read at the table—that the title to all property purchased under the act shall vest in the persons of the class of those who entered the service of the United States during the rebellion, and have been killed or disabled, and in union men whose property has been seized and confiscated by the rebels. He said there were many Senators whose chief object was to destroy Slavery, no matter what else was done. He confessed, at some length, that the true policy of confiscation was to devote the property accruing to his proposed amendment. He denied that Slavery is the cause of the war. He contended at some length that in fact the Free States were responsible for the War of 1812, the war with Mexico, and the repeal of the Missouri Compromise. If the Free States had not brought Slavery into Congress we should not have had the present trouble. The people of New-England had developed the mind to a great extent, but they are so smart and conceited that they think they can manage everybody's business, and, therefore, they are meddlers and are continually poking their noses after other people's bucket of swill. He referred to the platform of the Republican Party, and said if Congress passed this bill it would array the whole Southern people against the law. He was willing that Slavery should take its chances of war, and willing that slaves should be confiscated like other property, but if the Senate intend to make war on Slavery then there would only be another war begun.

After further discussion the Senate went into Executive session, and subsequently adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, May 1.

Mr. BLAIR, of Missouri, (Rep.,) called up the bill, recently reported from the Military Committee, authorizing the appointment of a Board of Fortifications, to provide for the sea-coast and other defenses of the United States, and other purposes, an abstract of which was published on the 24th of April.

Mr. BLAIR explained the provisions of the bill, and in response to a question, said it suspended the appropriations for fortifications already made. It also provides that the money shall be expended upon such works of defence as shall be recommended by the Commission proposed to be created by the bill.

The consideration of the bill was postponed until Tuesday week.

Mr. DUNN, of Indiana, (Rep.,) from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill for the better organization of the Adjutant-General's Department.

Mr. LOVEJOY, of Illinois, (Rep.,) from the Committee on Territories, reported a bill to render Freedom national and Slavery sectional.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the Pacific Railroad bill.

The House was occupied in explanation of numerous amendments.

The Committee rose without coming to a conclusion on the bill. Adjourned.

NEWS FROM NEW-MEXICO.

The Rebel Evacuation of Santa Fe—Destitution of the Rebels—Forced Levies from the Merchants—Movements of Gen. Canby, &c.

ST. LOUIS, Thursday, May 1.

Mr. MITCHELL, a merchant of New-Mexico, arrived in this city yesterday. He confirms the abandonment of Santa Fé by the rebels, who were retreating as fast as they could from the Territory. They are destitute of all munitions and provisions, and there is no hope of their being supplied from any quarter. At Santa Fé the rebels levied heavily on the merchants, in some cases taking as high as $15,000 worth of goods, paying in Confederate scrip. It is believed that Gen. CANBY would now follow the rebels and drive them out of the Territory. No doubt exists of the ability of the National troops to keep out the invaders, but an accession of two or three regiments of troops is necessary to keep the Apaches and Navajoes in subjection. They have been committing depredations for months past, stealing horses, mules, and everything that came in their way.

The report of the formation of a Territorial Government under rebel authority has no foundation. All the Territorial officers had returned to Santa Fé and resumed the performance of their duties. Chief Justice BENEDICT is on his way to the States. There is no United States Judge now in the Territory.

NEWS FROM FOOTE'S FLOTILLA.

Affairs Approaching a Crisis—Destruction of Cotton by the Rebels—Arrival of Rebel Gunboats from New-Orleans.

FORT WRIGHT, Wednesday, April 30.

There has been no change in the outward appearance of things at this place for the last two days. Certain indications now point to a speedy termination of our protracted siege, but I am not at liberty to say how soon.

A deserter to-day from the rebel fleet says that the vessel to which he was attached has been employed nearly a week past cruising between Memphis and this post in search of cotton. Every lot discovered has been burned. These lots varied from five to sixty bales. The aggregate destroyed is several thousand bales.

MONTGOMERY's rebel gunboat fleet from New-Orleans had arrived off the fort and joined HOLLINS' fleet. They have now a sufficiently strong naval force to make a show of resistance.

Great Rise in the Mississippi River.

HUNDREDS OF HOUSES SUBMERGED—CATTLE, SHEEP AND HOGS WASHED AWAY.

CAIRO, Thursday, May 1.

A special dispatch to the Tribune from Cairo says:

The packet Dilligence, from Tiptonville, reports an alarming stage of water in the Mississippi River. Hundreds of houses on the banks of the river at that place and New-Madrid are submerged, and thousands of cattle, sheep and hogs have been washed away.

Many families are living in flatboats.

Everywhere along the river there is very great suffering in consequence of this unprecedented flood.

The whole of Columbus up to the foot of the fortifications is overflowed, and the water is running into the windows of the houses.

Hickman, Ky., is also suffering greatly from the flood.

The fortifications at Island No. 10, and upon the [illegible] are still above water, excepting the upper battery.

A large amount of corn and hay, [illegible] stores captured from the rebels on the main shore are still lying in the Bayou, and cannot be removed until the waters subside.

Point Pleasant is entirely deserted out.

THE ARMY AND NAVY.

The United States Paymasters, in State-street, have been busy, for the last two days, paying off the various regular and volunteer officers on duty in and around New-York. The pay-rolls of the troops on Governor's Island are being made out in the Adjutant's office, and will be sent over to the Paymaster to be examined and checked as soon as possible, after which the men will receive their pay for the last four months. The men belonging to the Eighth and Twelfth Infantry, at Fort Hamilton, have already received their pay for the two months ending Feb. 28, and have thus had the advantage of the other troops in this vicinity.

About forty of the Seventy-eight New-York Volunteers were discharged a few days ago, for various reasons. Many of them were discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability.

The new gunboat Fort Royal remains at the Brooklyn Navy-yard, and the greater part of her crew is on liberty. Many of the Cumberland's men are stationed on the Fort Royal, and a few days ago an order for their discharge came on from Washington, but as they had volunteered for service on this vessel, they were allowed the option of taking their discharge or remaining in the service. They decided unanimously to stick to their vessel, and avow their determination to avenge the loss of the Cumberland.

The gunboat Mahaska having had her copper cleaned and repaired, hauled from the sectional dock to the Navy-yard yesterday.

A sloop-load of gun-carriages and two 100-pounder Parrott guns were sent from the yard yesterday.

The United States frigate Sabine took her departure from the yard at high water on Wednesday evening.

The storm yesterday retarded outside operations at the Navy-yard, but the work in the ship-houses and in the in-door departments proceeded as briskly as ever.

In the Ordnance and Provision departments there has not been quite so much doing of late, and several of the extra hands, taken on when work was pressing, have been discharged within the last few days.

Interesting Meeting of the Chamber of Commerce.

PRESENTATION OF A MEDAL TO GEN. ANDERSON AND SERGEANT HART—THE CHAMBER CHEERING—ELECTION OF OFFICERS—A SECRET CIRCULAR—OUR LAKE COAST DEFENCES—THE TAX BILL, ETC.

An unusually large meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held yesterday afternoon, both on account of the press of regular business, and the occasion of the presentation of medals to Gen. ROBERT ANDERSON, of Fort Sumter, and Sergeant HART. The arrival of Gen. ANDERSON was noticed with universal applause. The reading of the minutes was dispensed with, and the Chairman, P. PERIT, Esq., proceeded to address Gen. ANDERSON. He reviewed the incidents of the memorable siege of Sumter, and depicted, in glowing terms, the popular appreciation of the heroism of Gen. ANDERSON and his associates, in conclusion presenting the medal, which had been struck by order of the Chamber.

GEN. ANDERSON'S RESPONSE.

Gen. ANDERSON said: Mr. President and gentlemen of the Chamber of Commerce, I regret—and I assure you most deeply, after the flattering remarks which you have made to me—that my health is such that my Doctor has prohibited my attempting to speak. I thank you most earnestly—most warmly, gentlemen, for the honor you have done me in this presentation. I believe that the time will come when our country will be one country again. [Applause.] The same flag—[applause]—the same flag which we so dearly love, which my father, and, I doubt not, many of your fathers, strove to establish—that same flag, I believe, will yet float over our whole land. The old Fort Sumter flag is within your City, and I trust it will not be long before it is restored to its place again. [Applause.]

Gen. ANDERSON then received from the hands of the Chairman the medal, of which the following is a description:

FIRST CLASS SUMTER MEDAL, for presentation to Gen. ANDERSON; diameter six inches, weight 50 oz. Obverse—Medallion portrait of Gen. ANDERSON; inscription, "Robert Anderson, 1861." Reverse—The genius, or guardian spirit of America arising from Fort Sumter. Wounded by the insult to the country's honor, she seizes the starry symbol of the nation, and with the flaming torch of war, calls aloud for loyal men to protect it. Inscription "The Chamber of Commerce, New-York, honors the defender of Fort Sumter—the patriot, the hero and the man."

Mr. G. W. BLUNT said: Mr. Chairman—You said, in your address, that Fort Sumter surrendered. That is not so. Gen. ANDERSON never surrendered. [Applause.] The fort was evacuated. [Applause.]

The CHAIR—I will make that correction. Any gentlemen who desire to become acquainted with Gen. ANDERSON can now have the opportunity by coming forward.

After a number of gentlemen had been introduced, a member suggested that as Gen. ANDERSON's health was delicate, it would be better to do him the honor by three cheers, and relieved him of the hand-shaking. The Chamber complied with three hearty cheers and even a faint tiger.

The Chairman next called for Sergeant HART, of Fort Sumter, to come forward and receive his medal. As Mr. HART advanced, Gen. ANDERSON took him by the hand and said:

GENTLEMEN—Allow me to say that this man, though not a soldier at Fort Sumter, did as great service to our country in that fort as any man we had there. He was with me in Mexico, and was a soldier there. At Fort Sumter, he was a volunteer, and had charge of our marketing and mails. He is the man who is represented on this medal as climbing the flagstaff to replace our flag after it had fallen down. [Applause.]

The Chamber received Mr. HART with three cheers, which were modestly acknowledged.

The next business in order was the election of officers. This usually formal proceeding was unusually interesting, from the fact that an attempt had been made, through the circulation of a circular, to effect a change in the organization, and to infuse a new element into the Chamber. An entirely new list of officers was proposed, and various reforms suggested. Mr. A. A. LOW was named for President, in view of the presumed retirement of Mr. PERIT.

Mr. LOW addressed the Chamber, disclaiming any ambition for the office, or desire to interfere with the regular succession. He paid a high compliment to Mr. PERIT, and to his renomination for the Presidency.

The Chamber reelected Mr. PERIT by acclamation.

Mr. PERIT returned thanks, and explained that it was only in response to most earnest solicitations that he had consented to serve another term.

Messrs. ROYAL PHELPS and A. A. LOW were reelected Vice-Presidents.

Mr. PERIT, in continuation of his remarks, alluded to the increasing interest in the Chamber, and the addition to its powers by act of the Legislature, in giving force to the decisions of the Arbitration Committee. With reference to their control over the Sailors' Snug Harbor, he mentioned that the value of the property was now $2,000,000, and 440 superannuated sailors were comfortably provided for.

Mr. EDWARD C. BOGERT was unanimously reelected Treasurer.

Mr. ROBERT B. MINTURN was unanimously reelected Chairman of the Arbitration Committee.

On a motion to go into election for Secretary, Mr. C. H. MARSHALL objected. He said that the fact of the issue of the circular above referred to was known in the Chamber to the Secretary, and without making any charges against that gentlemen, he wanted to see the matter cleared up. He wanted no underhand work. It was due to the members that the Secretary should clear himself from all possible suspicion in the matter.

The election was postponed and the subject referred to a Committee consisting of Messrs. Marshall, Richards, Low, Blunt and Babcock.

The following new members were elected:

Reginald H. Anthon, Charles S. Baylis, Ernest Caylus, Edward C. Donnelly, Robert Ford, Samuel Hallett, Daniel Edwin Hawley, James L. Truslow, Walter Underhill, William M. Vermilye, William R. Warren.

The Executive Committee was reelected as follows:

Charles H. Marshall, Chairman; Henry Chauncey, William E. Dodge, James Gallatin, Sheppard Gandy, Nathaniel L. McCready, James D. P. Ogden, Augustus C. Richards, Henry A. Smythe, Benjamin R. Winthrop.

Mr. ROGERS, from the Committee on Lake Coast Defences, reported the action of the Legislature on the proposed plan of enlarging the canals so as to admit of the passage of gunboats to the lakes. He thought the expense would be but $3,000,000 or $4,000,000, at the outside. The Committee was continued and the report accepted.

The Chair suggested the necessity of the appointment of a Committee to proceed to Washington to advocate the passage of the Tax bill as already recommended by the Chamber in connection with the Boston Board of Trade.

Mr. LOW wanted the same Committee to advance the interests of the project for a line of steamers from San Francisco to China; but, after some discussion, it was decided that a separate Committee would be better on that subject, and Messrs. LOW, W. T. COMSTOCK, DAVID HADDEN and F. W. WHITE were appointed.

The suggestion of the Chair was adopted, and the following Committee appointed to proceed to Washington and look after the Tax bill, viz.: Messrs. DUNCAN, MALLORY, LOW, BOWEN and HAMMOND.

On motion of Mr. W. T. COMSTOCK, the Secretary was directed to correspond with the Boards of Trade of Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and other cities, with a view to forward the project of a line of steamers from San Francisco to China.

On motion of Mr. WHITE, a Committee was instructed to inquire into the expediency of obtaining the portraits of all the Presidents of the Chamber, to be hung on the walls of the Chamber.

A By-law was adopted requiring all nominations of new members to be referred to the Executive Committee.

Mr. WETMORE, in a few finely worded, called attention to the death of an esteemed member of the Chamber, Mr. R. C. GRAHAM. He moved appropriate resolutions, which were adopted.

The Chamber then adjourned.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

ARREST FOR VIOLATION OF THE CONCERT-SALOON LAW.—About 1 o'clock Wednesday morning, Officer BLAIR, of the Fourth Precinct, arrested MARIANNE WEBER, WILHELMINA TOWNS, and PHILIPPINA TOWNS, all of whom were waiter-girls at a concert saloon, in the Shakespeare Hotel, situated on the corner of William and Duane streets. The policeman found the girls engaged in serving lager and other drinks to the numerous guests present, notwithstanding the law, and the order which has been recently issued by Superintendent KENNEDY. HENRY MEERS, the bar-keeper, was also taken into custody, upon the charge of selling liquors in a concert saloon without a license. The prisoners were all taken before Justice BEEKMAN Wednesday, and, in default of bail, committed for examination. The proprietor of the establishment alleges that he has had no theatrical performance of any kind in his house since the order was served upon him by the Police. The ordinary instrumental concert has, however, been carried on every night, as usual.

NEW-YORK SANITARY ASSOCIATION.—This Association met last evening, Dr. POST presiding. A resolution was adopted requesting the Committee on Sanitary Legislation to report on the cause of the loss of the Health bill. Dr. ELEBERG presented a report which alluded to the alarming spread of syphilis in this city, and proposed to place the sources of the malady under medical police surveillance. A discussion followed on the subject, in which Messrs. RITTER, Gardner, Gelston, Roosevelt and others took part, but no action was taken on the report, which is to come up at the next meeting. The following gentlemen were appointed a Committee to report on the subject of the ventilation of public schools and other buildings, Drs. GARDNER, WOOSTER and GARRISH.

MOVING-DAY.—Those who had not the good fortune to get snugly into their new abodes in the cities of New-York and Brooklyn, before the "regular day" of moving, probably have a frightful lot of exclamation points to account for; for a more unpleasant day than yesterday for changing the residence of a family, with its appurtenances, could not easily be imagined. Although many succeeded in accomplishing their annual annoyance before the 1st of May, there was an unusual number of removals yesterday, notwithstanding the pitiless storm that prevailed during the entire day, to the great damage of useful and ornamental furniture.

HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD.—Important changes in the time table of this road will take effect on Monday next. The through trains will make connections with roads running North and West. Excursion tickets on local trains will be sold at reduced rates. See advertisement in to-morrow's edition.

SALE OF PAINTINGS.—A private collection of oil paintings, by eminent American artists, will be sold at auction, at 11 o'clock this morning, at the salerooms of Messrs. MEEKS & SOMERVILLE, No. 37 Nassau-street.
